Mr. CRAWFORD. You cannot go below that. In other words, he must do that.

Mr. PACE. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. He does not have the power to do anything he pleases?

Mr. PACE. No.

Mr. CRAWFORD. He must do this.

Mr. COOLEY. That is right. We are not giving him blanket authority. We are not giving him such authority as will enable him to bring about a scarcity of cotton in this country.

Mr. PACE. Under this bill now before the committee and under the law as it would be amended if the bill is enacted into law, he cannot fix marketing quotas at less than the domestic consumption, plus the exports, plus 30 percent, which is between four and five million bales of cotton.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman says he cannot go below that?

Mr. PACE. That is right. The 10,000,000 bales becomes effective when the domestic consumption drops down to 5,000,000 bales, at which point you have no exports.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself one additional minute.

Mr. Chairman, in concluding my remarks I would like to again invite attention to a discussion of this bill by other members of the committee to whom I shall yield time rather than consume any more time of the committee myself.

Mr. WERDEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WERDEL. Has Mr. Ralph S. Trigg, Administrator, Production and Marketing Administration of the Department of Agriculture expressed himself in connection with this bill?

Mr. COOLEY. I have a letter from Mr. Trigg which if the gentleman would like to see I will be glad to show to him. What does the gentleman have in mind?

Mr. WERDEL. I am advised that there is opposition by the Department to certain provisions of the bill.

Mr. COOLEY. Well, I do not know that there is opposition to certain provisions of the bill. I do know that the bill is not in complete accord with the wishes of the Department of Agriculture. The bill does not contain certain provisions that the Department would like to see in the bill. But may I say that I have never known a subcommittee to work more closely with people in a department than this subcommitte has worked with Mr. Trigg and the other officials within the Department of Agriculture.

The Department does not like the idea of giving credit for war crops. The Department does not like the crop-land approach which has been used in making allotments, and perhaps there are other things about the program which officials of the Department do not like, but I want to assure the gentlemen and the Members of this House that all of the recommendations of the officials of the Department have been given careful consideration. After all, the members of our committee have minds of their own and they have acted with intelligence in an effort to provide an honest and a fair program. While we have not given the Department all that its officials have requested and recommended, actually we have gone about 90 percent of the way. Whether they like the war crop provision or not, this Congress authorized it. Whether they like the crop-land approach or not, this Congress approved it. In the pending measure, we have made and are making an honest effort to put this program on an historical basis and we are trying to get away from the cropland provision which seems to be so objectionable to the officials of the Department.

May I say in conclusion that while this bill may not be perfect, it is certainly an improvement of the program which is now in operation and I hope that it will be approved and without substantial change.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has again expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS].

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask for this time for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee or the ranking Republican member of the committee for information. The gentleman from North Carolina will remember the discussion last year, as will the gentleman from California [Mr. WHITE], who is sitting by him, about the difficult conditions we met in two areas in my district. In the Coachilla Valley, many of our farmers have come in from the older cotton-raising regions of the South and they have begun to raise cotton in the Far West. The Old South has retained the cotton quota and we have the farmers. The result was that last year the farmers in that area were allowed only 19 percent of the acreage which they had planted the year before. That was partially met by the local committees giving every possible overage of acreage to the area, but there was still imposed on California the 5- and 10-acre reservation which the gentleman from North Carolina will realize is not applicable in California. We do not have 5- and 10-acre cotton fields in California. I am asking whether in this bill the situation has been improved, and I have another question regarding another area.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I might say that it has been improved. The gentleman from California [Mr. WHITE] may differ with me in that respect. But, I think that the bill is certainly considered by us to be eminently fair to the gentleman's district. I can easily see, where there is a shifting population and where farmers have gone from other States into the gentleman's district, that it might be difficult for them to get acreage, because acreage is made to the land and not to the man.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. It has produced a difficult situation for us.

Mr. COOLEY. I might say to the gentleman that we have made provision which authorizes the State committee of California to preserve 10 percent of its acreage allotments at the State level to make adjustments among the counties of California. If you have an acute situation in a particular county, then that county should go to the State committee to increase its cotton-acreage allotment.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Will the gentleman tell me then whether there is still that reservation proposed for 5- and 10-acreage allotments which does not do California any good?

Mr. COOLEY. I am surprised to learn that California is not a State of little growers. I was led to believe that you had a lot of little growers out there.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Not of cotton; we have in some commodities.

Mr. COOLEY. If you do not have any little growers, I do not suppose you would be interested in the little-grower provision.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. What is that little-grower provision?

Mr. COOLEY. Well, the little-grower provision made a reservation of acreage for every farmer who had produced less than 5 acres of cotton, but we are now eliminating that and in future years, and if we have a reduction program, every farmer will be required to reduce across the board.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. May I ask the gentleman from California [Mr. WHITE] if this bill creates the same situation or a better situation in the Coachella area.

Mr. WHITE of California. I will say to the gentleman that the matter about which he complains has been rectified to a very large extent in this bill. The thing that caused the reduction down to 19 percent that the gentleman mentioned a moment ago was the so-called county factor.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. That is right.

Mr. WHITE of California. Now, that has been eliminated in this bill, and the limitation of cropland is now 50 percent in hardship cases, so that man who got 19 percent could at least get 50 percent, unless there were other limitations which held him down. Also, in this bill, the 15 percent county reservation is mandatory whereas it is merely permissive in the present law, and in addition the 10-percent State reservation is mandatory and can and must be used for the relief of hardship cases, making a total of 25 percent, which is really left in the hands of the State and county committees to relieve hardship cases.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. May I ask the gentleman from California then, in the case of Imperial County, where we grew about 10,000 acres last year, will this bill protect that acreage against reduction for another year?

Mr. WHITE of California. I regret to tell the gentleman that it will not. As he knows, H. R. 128 knocked out 1949 for figuring quotas in future years. I did not subscribe to that, but that is what happened.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. In other words, the farmers of the Imperial Valley will then be dependent upon the generosity of the State committee or the county committee rather than have their rights protected on their previous records of growing cotton?

Mr. WHITE of California. They have the same right as any farmer in the United States, as far as that goes, but the fact of the matter is that the Federal law which we passed in this Congress knocked out 1949, as a quota year. As the gentleman well knows, I considered it very unfair to California at the time, and I still do.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Having in mind the Coachella Valley and the Imperial Valley as well, if I understand this bill at all I think the California situation will be worse instead of better. You have a small crop of cotton coming to market now from the current crop, very small as related to last year. We are making it mandatory that the Secretary under certain conditions impose national marketing quotas. I should like the gentleman from California [Mr. WHITE] to show us the language in this bill that improves your conditions out there, because your marketing quotas are coming in. Here is new language with respect to how the State bases shall be arrived at. I do not see anything here that would improve your situation.

As the distinguished chairman of the committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY], has pointed out, what this type of legislation really does is confer proprietary rights on certain acreages of land, which denies to American citizens the right to grow that particular crop, whether tobacco, cotton, sugar, peanuts, or what not. I should like to see the language in here that protects your farmers in that valley.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. The gentleman agrees with me that we are getting the farmers in the West and the South is retaining the acreage?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I saw that very situation in the gentleman's district just a few weeks ago.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. ABERNETHY. That is not exactly a correct statement my friend made there, because last year, due to the fact that you had had a certain increase in cotton acreage out there, we of the South gave up acreage in order that you might increase the normal quota you have.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I think the gentleman is correct. I think that was the Memphis agreement, was it not?

Mr. ABERNETHY. That was the law, anyhow. It became the law.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. Let me get these figures in the RECORD. The gentleman's State in 1943 had only 291,000 acres in cotton; in 1944 only 303,000, in 1945 only 319,000, and in 1946 only 359,000.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. May I interrupt the gentleman very briefly to suggest that we should not forget that in those years we were asked to stop raising cotton in order to raise necessary war food crops.

Mr. PACE. So was every other State. For 1946 you had only 359,000 acres. You jumped in 1947 to 536,000 acres, and in 1948 to 810,000 acres. While the gentleman from Mississippi took the average of all of these years. We brought a bill to the floor and passed it to let your State allotment be based on only 1947 and 1948. We gave you your two high years. We did not make you back to 1944 when you only had 303,000 acres. We let California take its choice and gave it either 85 percent of its 1948 acreage or 95 percent of the average acreage that it had for 1947 and 1948, and we all thought as the gentleman from Mississippi said, or at least we were trying to be very gracious and very generous.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I think my State appreciates that. We are only asking our friends from the South to look at the census figures occasionally.

Mr. PACE. It has never been the policy to allot either wheat, cotton, corn, or anything else on a population basis.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of California. I want to answer the gentleman from Michigan by reading the language in the bill which would give the relief I mentioned a moment ago. I refer him to page 9 of the bill starting at the end of line 13:

Provided, That the county committee may by the use of the county reserve increase any farm acreage allotment up to 50 percent of such acreage.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Of course that language deals with the dividing up of the piece of pie which is allotted to a State. It does not give the States substantial relief. It provides that you can take away from one section of the country and give it to another section.

I want to call the gentleman's attention to this: In the area of southwestern California and the southwestern part of the United States and the western part of the United States we have irrigation and reclamation. The fixing of marketing quotas is one of the most destructive moves against irrigation and reclamation the Congress ever conceived of. Historically the basis of your operations in these irrigation and reclamation areas has been sugar beets. Cotton is coming into the picture now. Marketing quotas on sugar and marketing quotas on cotton are coming into the picture and this type of legislation signs the death certificate for irrigation and reclamation. That is something for you gentlemen of the West to think about.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield.

Mr. PACE. While we are on that question, if you are going on that philosophy, to say that all this cotton acreage should move to the West, will the gentleman try to explain what Texas, Georgia, and Mississippi are going to make a living on?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not going on that philosophy at all. I am going on the proposition that in the last 10 years our population has increased by approximately nineteen and one-half millions of people and our production of cotton is going down, going down, going down, going down. Marketing quotas decrease production of goods for humankind. We have your frozen quota on sugar, for instance, which Congress approved of. I am not criticizing anybody. I am just analyzing the situation. Cuba takes the increase in the consumptive market through our marketing quotas. Who is going to take the increase in the marketing quotas on cotton when that becomes frozen, and so on down the line?

We are conferring proprietary rights on individual pieces of land, thus denying to American citizens the right to make their own selection as to what they shall grow. I am just analyzing the thing and stating what we are doing and that is what this kind of a program does. There is no question about it.

Mr. ABERNETHY. The gentleman from Michigan just stated that the production of cotton was going down and down and down and down. The facts are that last year there was more cotton produced than in any year except one since 1928. I do not have the tables behind 1928; so the gentleman is just honestly mistaken.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, let us take the 20-year production of cotton and compare it to the figures showing the supply available per capita of the people in the United States. You will find that I can support my statement. I challenge you to put the figures in the RECORD.

Mr. ABERNETHY. The gentleman overlooks the fact that you have a great deal of synthetics coming on the market like paper and rayon which replaces cotton fibers.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Sure. The synthetics come into the market because the marketing quotas put on the original product pushes the price up so high that then all these synthetics come in and absorb the market. Any student of the commodity markets knows that.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ABBITT].

Mr. ABBITT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the pending bill, H. R. 9109, the cotton and peanut acreage allotments and marketing quotas bill. This measure is of vital importance to all cotton and peanut producers in this great country of ours.

The cotton section of this bill has been explained admirably by the chairman of our Agriculture Committee, the Honorable HAROLD D. COOLEY, and I will address my remarks to explain that part of the bill which deals with amendments to the peanut provisions of the present law.

Peanuts have been classified as one of the basic agricultural commodities in our agricultural program. Comparatively speaking, only a small percentage of the farmers of America produce peanuts, but to the producers of this commodity it is their main money crop and affects their entire economic stability and well-being.

This bill makes about five changes in the present law, all of which are minor, with one exception.

The first change deals with apportioning the national allotment among the various States. Under the present law all future allotments will use the 1950 allotment as a base, and if a cut or increase is determined by the Secretary of Agriculture the same is made to the States on a pro rata basis straight across the board. This bill before us keeps that same provision with a proviso that no State allotment can be cut below that which would be established if the national acreage allotment were based on the average acreage harvested in the 5 years—1945–49. In other words, the acreage allotment will be apportioned among the States according to the present law now in effect but with the proviso that no State shall receive an allotment less than it would have received if it were based on the average acreage harvested from 1945 to 1949.

The second change is a provision which requires the Secretary, after he has fixed the national acreage allotment, to ascertain whether or not there will result a short supply in any particular type of peanut. If it is determined by the Secretary that a shortage will result, then the Secretary shall allot to that particular type additional acreage so that there will be enough peanuts produced to meet the demands of the trade. The additional allotment to a particular type is over and above the national allotment. It is not to be considered in future history of that particular type and is allotted pro rata to those States which are producing the type of peanut in short supply, to be allotted to the producers in those States producing such type peanuts; provided, however, that the allotment for any State may not be increased under this proviso above the 1950 acreage allotment for such State.

There are several separate and distinct types of peanuts.

First, the Virginia-type peanut, raised principally in Virginia, North Carolina, northern South Carolina and Tennessee. This nut is used almost exclusively for the edible trade.

Then there is the Valencia-type peanut, which is known as the Ball Park peanut, because they are used exclusively for roasting and selling in the hull. It is very similar to the Virginia-type peanut and they can well be treated as one type, which will be done from now on in this discussion. This type is raised principally in Tennessee.

In addition to the above two types, we have the Spanish and Runner type peanuts, raised in the southwest and southeast.

The present law treats peanuts as one commodity, with no distinction whatever being made between types. Ever since the cessation of hostilities, there has been a surplus of peanuts, while, at the same time, there has not been a surplus in each particular type of peanut. Therefore, in fixing the national quotas, it has been necessary for the Secretary of Agriculture to constantly reduce the acreage allotments without reference to types, which means that frequently there has been a short supply of the edible type peanuts. I had hope that legislation could be offered to the House whereby each particular type of peanut could be treated as a separate commodity and sufficient acres allotted to each type to meet the demands of the trade, which would place the peanut program on a par with the tobacco program which has worked so well throughout the years. This was not done, and, in my opinion, this substitute proposal offers the next best solution.

This measure does not call for any additional burden on the taxpayers of America, but, rather, will result in a savings in the long run. It merely permits the producers of a particular type of peanut to produce a sufficient quantity to meet the demands of the trade, without being penalized because there is an over-all surplus of peanuts in some other type or types. Under the present law, no relief can be afforded to the producers of a particular type of peanut even though they do not contribute to the surplus and the demands of the trade will take care of the amount being produced under the present program.

I do not agree with the limitation that is placed on this bill providing that the Secretary can only allot additional acres up to the 1950 quota, because the Secretary should be allowed to survey the situation and allot sufficient acreage to produce enough peanuts to meet the actual demands of the trade. Certainly our growers are entitled to this. However, the majority of the committee placed this restriction in the measure.

The third change continues the 1950 excess-oil program indefinitely. This means simply that peanut producers are allowed to produce excess peanuts for oil; but provided, however, that the excess oil peanuts produced by a producer shall not exceed his 1947 allotment—which in almost every case was larger than the 1950 allotment, and in Virginia means about 21,000 acres—and provided further, that these excess oil peanuts shall be sold to the Secretary or his duly designated agent who will at the time the peanuts are delivered pay the regular oil price for same. Then, the Secretary, if it later develops that there is a shortage in the edible trade, may channel these peanuts into the edible trade to meet the actual demands, providing that the price he receives for same must be the same as that which the Commodity Credit Corporation may sell its peanuts for, which is 5 percent more than the regular price, plus the regular handling charges, storage, and so forth; and provided further, that if and when this is done, all the producers of the said type of peanuts that were channeled into the edible trade are to be paid the difference in the price received for said peanuts by the Secretary after all handling charges, and so forth, have been paid. In other words, if these excess-oil peanuts are sold into the regular trade because of a shortage, the farmers raising these peanuts are to get the benefit of the increased price after all costs have been paid. At present, this law applies to 1950 only. Under the pending bill it is continued indefinitely.

The other change permits a grower who fails to plant his allotment to voluntarily surrender same to the county committee and the surrendered allotment is kept in the county and reallocated by the committee.

All in all, the peanut provision in this bill is a step in the right direction and is one that will be a real help to the peanut producers, without a drain on the Federal Treasury. I trust this House will receive it favorably.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH].

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, last August when this legislation was up I did my best to point out what in my opinion would be the inequities that would result, and certainly I think the statements I made with reference to the inequities that would result have been fully justified in the last year. I have frequently mentioned some of these inequities, and in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of today, July 26, 1950, you will find a few letters from nearly all of the cotton States that show that people literally are being compelled to leave the business of growing cotton.

In one county in my district we had 427 acres to distribute to what are called new farmers. What is a new farmer under the terms of this legislation? A new farmer might be a man who has grown cotton for 40 years on a given piece of land but happened to be so unfortunate that he lost the opportunity to farm that piece of land and had to move to new acreage with no history of cotton in 1946, 1947, and 1948. They would say to a man 60 years of age: "You have farmed cotton 40 years, but because you did not farm cotton in the 3 years mentioned on a given piece of land you are a new farmer and we will give you 1 acre or seven-tenths of 1 acre." Yes; there were cases like that by hundreds in my district, and the record so shows. Some of these men are returned veterans. I challenge anyone to show otherwise. You talk about dividing the pie? Why, there were some people who did not get even a spoonful of pie.

Something has been said about voting. If I interpret the legislation correctly, if a man is given just 1 acre of cotton and he says, "That is too small, I cannot afford to grow it" that he cannot vote this coming fall. He will not be a participant. In instances you put a man out of doing what he has done for 40 years then you say, "No, you cannot vote. You are a new farmer. You get 1 acre. You have to quit because you did not get enough."

The same thing happened not only with reference to cotton in some of my counties; it happened with reference to peanuts. Although a farmer has grown peanuts and cotton many years, if he loses his land which has a history, in many instances he is out of the business of growing cotton and peanuts, or the same as out, because of the smallness of his acreage. Then you tell him to grow sweetpotatoes. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LARCADE], the gentlemen from Florida [Mr. ROGERS and Mr. SIKES], and I went down to see Mr. Trigg about a week ago and he expressed considerable doubt that they would be able to do very much for sweetpotatoes this year. He referred to the fact that this is a permissive support price—the one for sweetpotatoes.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, I said last August there would be great inequities. I have offered amendments and those who are present here know that I did seek to bring about changes. The August 3, 1949, RECORD shows this. I am glad I offered these amendments and, if given the opportunity, I am going to offer some more as consideration of this bill proceeds. I have said each time this legislation came up for consideration that it had to be changed in order that more fairness might prevail. I am glad to say that my colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE] informs me that our district is to get a little bit more out of this bill. I appreciate this. We need it. We need it in order for these people not to have a luxurious living but a mere living. Yes; I appreciate it, and I will go one step further and say that if this program is to endure, the day will come when sections similar to that in which I live, where we have grown cotton for 100 years, will get even more acreage. I predict that very confidently, and I predict, furthermore, the day is coming when we are going to have more peanuts in that section. The wheels grind slowly at times, but they always grind that which is fair and right finally. The only question is, Can we hold out until the corrections are made? More corrections will come; some have come.

I have some figures I propose to include in the RECORD which show that the producers in some of the cotton counties of the South receive on an average of even less than 4 acres, whereas in some of the other cotton counties the producers receive over 100 acres on an average. There is too much disparity between those two figures, I submit.

In an attempt to get some idea as to average cotton allotments per producer in some of the cotton counties, I submitted to the Congressional Library some figures I have been able to get from various sources. Some of the figures are not completely up-to-date. However, from the standpoint of getting a picture of variations in some of the counties even within States, the figures are helpful, I feel.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., May 31, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: This is in reply to your request of May 18 for information on the number of cotton allotments, by counties, for the States of Arizona, New Mexico, and California. I am enclosing a table which indicates the number of 1950 group I cotton acreage allotments for these three States.

You will note that these are group I allotments only. The group I allotments are those given to growers who have a history of cotton production within the meaning of the legislation. These totals do not include allotments for new growers or allotments for growers who had previously produced cotton where their cotton production history was established through the appeals mechanism. Complete tabulations of the number of allotments other than group I allotments are not available at present.

Sincerely yours,

K. T. HUTCHINSON,
Assistant Secretary.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: As requested in recent correspondence received from you and also as requested by Senator Graham, we are attaching a tabulation by counties which outlines most of the information requested in your letter. Your letter requests the following information:

1. How many cotton producers are in each county? The attached tabulation shows in column (1) the number of old cotton producers and in column (3) the number of new cotton producers in each county.

2. How many farmers in each county received 5 acres of cotton or less? Shown in column (2) of the attached tabulation.

3. How many new producers applied for acreage in each county? This information is not available in the State office; however, column (3) shows the number of new allotments approved by each county.

4. How much acreage was there to distribute among the new producers in each county and how much did each get? Shown in column (4) of the attached tabulation.

5. Did any receive zero acres? Yes. For many counties there was not sufficient acreage available to make allotments to all new applicants.

6. What percent of the new producers in each county do you regard as genuine farmers? According to instructions issued to county committees a cotton allotment was not approved by the county committee for a new grower unless the man was a genuine farmer.

7. How much in acres did the recent cotton amendment help your new producers in each county? Shown in column (6) of the attached tabulation.

8. How much did the recent cotton amendment help your old producers? Shown in column (10) of the attached tabulation.

9. How many of your producers county by county receiving less than 5 acres probably will grow no cotton? Any information on this would be purely a guess until acreage measurements have been determined for all farms and since we have not had an opportunity to survey each county and visit every farm having a cotton allotment, we will not answer this question.

10. How many will cease to farm for themselves? This question cannot be answered since it would require a personal contact with every cotton farmer.

As stated in our letter of May 9 this information is furnished in reply to your request. We are sorry that the information was not available earlier but we have just completed the summarization of data received from our county committees.

Very truly yours,

G. T. SCOTT,
State Director, Production and Marketing Administration.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
Auburn, Ala., June 23, 1950.

Hon. JOHN SPARKMAN,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SPARKMAN: This is with reference to your letter of June 8, 1950, with which you enclosed a request from Congressman BECKWORTH for certain information concerning the establishment of 1950 cotton acreage allotments in Alabama. For convenience, we shall list the various items in the same order in which they appear in the request enclosed with your letter.

1. How many cotton producers are in each county? See column 1 of the attached tabulation.

2. How many farmers in each county received 5 acres of cotton or less? See column 2 of the attached tabulation.

3. How many new producers applied for acreage in each county? Column 3 of the attached tabulation shows the number of new grower allotments approved for each county. We do not have any record of the total number of applications filed, since any applications which were not approved by county PMA committees were maintained in the county office files and were not forwarded to the State office.

4. How much acreage was there to distribute among the new producers in each county? The reserve for new growers was held at the State level by the State PMA committee, and this reserve acreage was apportioned directly to eligible farmers who filed applications within a prescribed time limit. The reserve held by the State PMA committee was slightly more than 29,000 acres and this amount was sufficient to give each eligible producer 89.61 percent of the acreage recommended by county PMA committees.

5. How much did each get? See immediately preceding question.

6. Did any receive zero acres? It was not necessary to establish a zero acreage allotment for any producer who files an application for a new grower allotment within the prescribed time limit and otherwise met eligibility requirements. A number of zero acreage allotments were established in those cases where producers filed an application after the established closing date or were declared ineligible by the county committee for some other reason.

7. What percent of the new producers in each county do you regard as genuine farmers? We regard all new producers receiving new-grower allotments as genuine farmers, due to the fact that the regulations and instructions required that a representative of the county PMA committee visit the farm to determine that an actual farming operation will be carried out in 1950. On the basis of these farm visits, county PMA committees disapproved applications in those cases where a genuine farming operation would not be carried out in 1950.

8. How much in acres did the recent cotton amendment help your new producers in each county? The old ones? Public Law 471 provided that "new farms" were eligible to share in the acreage available for reapportionment as a result of the surrender or release of cotton acreage by other cotton farms. Records of the reapportionment made by county PMA committees to individual farms are maintained in county offices and this office does not have this information. For the acreage which each county received under Public Law 471 for regular old farms, see column 4 of the attached tabulation.

9. How many of your producers, county by county, receiving less than 5 acres probably will grow no cotton? We have no way of making an estimate which we would consider worth while in connection with this question. Production and harvesting methods, however, do make it necessary for a farmer to grow a large acreage of cotton in order to have an economical operation. Most of the cotton in Alabama is grown on family-sized farms where a majority of the labor is furnished by the farm family. For this and other reasons, we believe that the percentage of small farms growing cotton will be about as high as the percentage of large farms growing cotton.

10. How many will cease to farm for themselves? Again we do not have any method of arriving at a worth while estimate on this item. Please refer to our answer to the immediately preceding question.

We trust that the information given above and that shown on the attached tabulation will be sufficient to enable you to furnish Congressman BECKWORTH the desired information. If this office can prepare any additional data for your use, please call on us.

Very truly yours,

W. B. CRAWLEY,
Chairman, Alabama State PMA Committee.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
Little Rock, Ark., June 21, 1950.

Hon. J. W. FULBRIGHT,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FULBRIGHT: This is in reply to your letter of June 16, 1950, requesting certain information with respect to farm cotton-acreage allotments for the cotton counties of Arkansas.

Although we do not have a complete analysis of all the information exactly as you requested it, we have attempted to furnish you on the attached tabulations as much information as possible without disturbing the county offices which are at this time very busily engaged in determining performance with respect to the 1950 cotton, peanut, rice, and corn acreage-allotment programs, along with their many other duties.

It is hoped that this information meets with your approval, and we assure you that we are always anxious to cooperate in furnishing any needed information upon request. Your continued interest in all the phases of our farm program is appreciated.

Yours very truly,

J. L. WRIGHT,
Chairman, Arkansas State Committee.

[1] Very little, if any, additional acres allotted to any county in the State.

[2] Not able to make this determination at the present time.

[3] It is not believed that any producers will cease to farm because of cotton allotments.

[4] Noncotton county.

[5] No new-grower requests.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I take this time to get some thoughts in the RECORD which I want to use in my district. I am not critical of the committee for bringing this bill to the House. I simply want to point certain things out according to my own views.

The Congress of the United States has gotten itself over a barrel by reason of acts which it has committed. I refer to the five or six basic labor laws which in effect have given the labor leaders of this country substantially a monopoly with reference first, to the cost; and second, to the selling price of the manufactured goods which the farmers of the United States purchase. The Congress, finding that monopoly in operation and operating through collective bargaining agreements, wakes up and finds that the buying power of the American farmer, who grows the food, fats, fiber, forestry products and produces the mine products and petroleum products, cannot purchase those manufactured goods with the wages which the open market gives to the agricultural worker when he turns his labor, in the form of his products, into that open market.

So then the Congress—and when I say the Congress, I mean the administration, too, from the White House down—finds itself in a squeeze and proceeds then to try and legislate itself out of that squeeze by adopting so-called price-support programs which have been operating the last few years. Then as those price-support programs measured by the great tonnage turned out under the price-support programs for which the Federal Treasury must assist in financing, becomes such a burden on the taxpayers, especially those in cities and who work in industrial plants and who kick about the amount of the appropriations and say "down with the farm-support program." So then we start out and finally get into this field of marketing quotas, conferring proprietary rights on certain people who control certain areas of land. Why do we do that? We do that to prevent tonnage being produced which, multiplied by the price-support program, would increase the disbursement that would have to be made from the Federal Treasury through appropriations of the Congress against which certain types of voters kick.

We come along, as the gentleman from Arkansas pointed out a while ago, to where we had a great cotton crop last year. We had price supports last year for cotton. We had no absolute lever to prevent acreage from being planted, and therefore the acreage was planted; therefore the big number of bales appeared on the market and the support program was loaded. Now we come along here, and we say, "We will put in marketing quotas 1 or 2 years ahead so that they cannot grow a lot of bales to be multiplied by a price support per bale." That is the thing that I keep running through my mind. I am not criticizing the committee for bringing this bill here. I just do not like the proposition of getting ourselves into a pinch where we have to do things which are inequitable to our people and which actually takes away from them the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WHITE of California. The gentleman realizes, does he not, that producers do not have to go into this alleged strait-jacket which the gentleman seems to think that they would have to go into.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not talking about the people having to go into strait-jackets. I am talking about the Congress of the United States passing laws which put them in a strait-jacket, and that is exactly what we have done.

Mr. WHITE of California. Oh, no.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Oh, yes. We fixed it so that a man cannot have a job in a factory unless he joins a union. Congress did that.

Mr. WHITE of California. We are talking about something else now.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am talking about the thing that called for price supports on farm production so that those farmers, as has been argued here today, can buy those manufactured products.

Mr. WHITE of California. Are not the farmers organized?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Of course, the farmer demands a wage. Why should he not? On what ground can we stand to give labor the power it has and say to the farmer: "But as for you, you can live on a 10-cent-per-hour wage or a 15-cent-per-hour wage." We find such a plan cannot work, and then we come along to the farm price-support mechanism of this kind to make the organized labor laws and collective bargaining machinery work, the latter calling for the former.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. I would just like to ask the gentleman, do I understand the gentleman from Michigan is opposed to the agricultural price-support program?

Mr. CRAWFORD. In no way have I said that. I am analyzing it.

Mr. COOLEY. I was confused.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is no need of being confused on what I said. The gentleman knows that the Congress of the United States put us in a strait-jacket when we approved six basic labor laws, and we cannot afford, from an economic standpoint, across the country as a whole, to let the farmer go along here and try to live on a 10-cent wage. He could not buy the manufactured goods. You would have unemployment by the millions of people. Your economy would go all to pieces and your $257,000,000,000 debt and your $55,000,000,000 budget could not be supported.

Mr. COOLEY. So the gentleman is for the support program for agriculture.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am for the stabilizing of the economy but I am not in favor of the thing which forces the stabilization program.

Mr. CROOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CROOK. Is the gentleman opposed to organized labor?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am opposed to the Wagner Act, which I voted against, and every chance I got I voted to repeal it. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. CROOK. Not quite. I asked the gentleman if he is opposed to organized labor?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not opposed to organized labor but I am opposed to the strait-jacketing provisions wherein we give labor leaders the power to take the American economy by the throat and close down any industry they desire to close down, whether it be steel, coal, or any other type of manufacturing. Does that answer the gentleman's question? I should like to answer the question right straight on the nose.

Mr. CROOK. I am not exactly answered on that question, but is the gentleman opposed to the right to strike?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The right to strike against the general welfare? Yes. This should never occur.

Mr. CROOK. Is the gentleman opposed to the Manufacturers' Association frequently taking a stand against labor?

Mr. CRAWFORD. What is their stand against labor?

Mr. CROOK. They have always taken a stand against labor.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let me tell the gentleman something. When a man denies himself comforts and saves money and invests it in machinery and machine tools so that men may have a chance to work and earn their living and feed their families, is that man who thus saved, an enemy of labor or taking a stand against labor? That kind of poppycock is no good. The only trouble is our people do not understand how the machine of savings and investment operates, and this, I believe, is largely due to a deficiency of school teaching the details of capitalism.

Mr. CROOK. Do not misunderstand me.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not misunderstanding the gentleman.

Mr. CROOK. I am not against either, but I do believe in a spirit of intelligent compromise around the conference table so that we can all live. However, there has always been a thrust by one or the other, and we have a tendency to go too far in one direction or the other.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now I can agree with the gentleman 100 percent on intelligent compromise and that these things should be negotiated and that the strikes should never be called, so that the people would have the goods to consume and employment would be maintained, and the national income could flow so that we can pay these bills we have to pay and thus avoid inflationary deficit financing.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to say to the Committee and to the Committee on Agriculture that there are certain features of this bill which in my judgment are unwise, discriminatory, and indefensible, and should be changed. I have certain amendments which I expect to offer later. I am now in this situation that it is my responsibility to conduct hearings on the $10,000,000,000 supplemental appropriations budget to meet the Korean situation. Those hearings are now in progress. Therefore,

I cannot speak at length at this moment, but at the proper time under the 5-minute rule I hope I may have the favorable attention of the Committee in connection with certain revisions of the bill.

Mr. GATHINGS. If the gentleman will yield, I wonder if he would have his amendments printed in the RECORD so we could look them over tomorrow.

Mr. MAHON. I do not have the amendments ready for printing in the RECORD, but the object of the amendments in part would be to strike out that language which sets out the State of Texas for particular and unusual and different treatment as compared to other States. Such language appears on page 3 and in other places in the bill.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 7 minutes, and at this time yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARSALIS].

Mr. MARSALIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Kansas. It is my understanding that an amendment will be offered which will strike section 6 of the bill which pertains to the 1951 wheat-acreage allotment. The gentleman's district in Kansas borders my own district in Colorado and I know that the problems are the same with reference to the effect which such an amendment would have in striking out this section of the bill on the wheat economy of the district. I would like to request the gentleman to explain just what the effect will be if this amendment striking section 6 of the bill is adopted and the previous law is put into effect.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I shall be very glad to do so. I want to say at the beginning that the gentleman from Colorado has been very diligent in his efforts to see that the people of his district and the State of Colorado secure a fair acreage allotment of wheat and he has worked on and supported the provision which is included in section 6 of the bill.

In order to fully explain the situation, I think I should go back a little and point out that last year it was necessary to have special legislation to take care of various areas in the country where wheat production was greatly expanded during the war. In those areas expansion took place at the request of the Secretary of Agriculture and the War Food Administration. The farmers in those areas made a great contribution, not only to the national economy and the war effort but in the years following the war they made a great contribution to the efforts of this country to feed the world and stop the march of communism in Europe. Until last year the expansion of acreage was required every year in order to meet our requirements and commitments, so far as wheat is concerned. This year—1950—for the first time it many years, it was necessary to have acreage allotments on wheat and under the formula in the law full account in making allotments could not be given to the increase in acreage which had taken place in the gentleman's State, as well as other States in the area. For that reason, legislation was enacted last year which is a part of Public Law 272, Eighty-first Congress, which increased the national acreage allotment for 1950 and provided for its distribution. Under that provision the gentleman's State of Colorado received a large increase in its allotment. This year the same situation does not prevail, but the application of the regular formula for wheat-acreage allotment would still work a hardship upon the gentleman's State.

It was for that purpose that the provisions which appear as section 6 of the bill were introduced. At the time the legislation was considered and placed in the bill it was the understanding that the wheat acreage allotment for this year would be approximately 62,000,000 acres and it was felt in order to take care of the situation prevailing in Colorado and other States it would be necessary to have an additional allotment to the national allotment proclaimed by the Secretary.

However, the Korean war has entirely changed the situation and instead of 62,000,000 acres being allotted, the Secretary recently proclaimed an acreage allotment nationally of 72,800,000 acres or almost 11,000,000 acres more than the allotment which was initially contemplated. This increase in the acreage allotment made it possible for the Department of Agriculture, through administrative procedures, to make changes in the allotments to the States by which it was able to entirely take care of the situation prevailing in the gentleman's State of Colorado.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself two additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this matter has been worked out between the Department of Agriculture and the Subcommittee of the House Committee on Agriculture, the chairman of which was the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE], and the subcommittee has been entirely satisfied as a result of these conferences that it will be possible for the department to work out, administratively, a procedure whereby the States, which would suffer if the ordinary allotment procedures were followed, will receive an allotment which will be approximately equal to that which they would receive if section 6 of this bill remained in force. That is not universally true. It does not apply to every State, but I can say to the gentleman from Colorado that his State will receive, under the administrative procedure in question, an acreage allotment which is fully as large as it would have received if section 6 had remained in the bill.

There is an advantage at this time if we eliminate that section from the bill, in that it means the Department of Agriculture can at once send out the State acreage allotments to the State PMA committees, and those committees can make the allotments to the counties and the counties make the allotments to the farms at once. In view of the fact that winter wheat planting will begin in the gentleman's State and in my State in the next 30 days, there is a great advantage in having those allotments made at the present time. If we retain this section in the bill, the allotments cannot be made definitely and completely until the bill is passed or until the Congress adjourns. For that reason it was felt better to eliminate the provision from the bill and rely upon the administrative procedure which will take care of the situation, I am sure, to the gentleman's entire satisfaction.

Mr. MARSALIS. I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has again expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE].

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, reference was made a few minutes ago by my colleague from Texas [Mr. MAHON] to the provisions of this bill which relate only to the State of Texas. I call the attention of the members of the committee to the fact that the State of Texas accounts for 37 percent of the allotment of cotton in this country. So when we speak of the provisions that relate only to the State of Texas we speak of provisions that affect more than one-third of the entire acreage involved in this bill.

The provisions to which reference was made and to which objection was voiced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON] merely provide that the State of Texas in the year 1951 shall be treated as other States in the Union are treated, as every one of the States east of the Mississippi River is treated. It does not place Texas under any special gadget. On the contrary it takes Texas out from the special gadget or formula which was imposed on us this year. It has come to the point in our committee where nobody wants us to call this gadget by the name of his State. But regardless of what you call it, there was a proviso placed in the bill last year that was calculated to assist the State of California, and which I think did assist that great State. Reference was made to it a while ago. I have no criticism of what was done for California, but representatives of the Department of Agriculture had advised the committee that this gadget would not apply to the State of Texas and it did not do so until the original acreage figures were changed. In the final calculation of figures, it was determined that the State of Texas would come under that gadget by 93 acres. Out of a calculation of something more than 10,000,000 acres, they got down to such a nicety that they said that they could be sure the State of Texas would come under the formula which had been devised for California by 93 acres.

So they placed us under this gadget—and I want the RECORD to be clear that I have never felt that we were properly placed under the gadget or that the law placed us there, but that we were put there by reason of some calculations which I do not think were at all justified—possibly that has nothing to do with the case now because we went under it, but it meant that cotton acreage was allotted in Texas this year from the State to the county on the basis of a 2-year history of cotton, only; whereas, in Mississippi, in Georgia, in North Carolina, and in the bulk of the Nation cotton acreage was allotted from the State to the counties on the basis of 4-year history, including the war crops that were grown during those 4 years. Those individuals in the Department of Agriculture who revised these acreage figures to bring Texas under this gadget did not want to count war crops. Public Law No. 12 plainly said that we would count those war crops. It is not a question of whether war crops should be counted or not; you, this Congress, passed this legislation that provided that they should be counted. As I see it that question is closed and I cannot agree that anyone has a moral right to juggle the figures just to keep from carrying out the proviso Congress made. In the State of Texas it happens that a portion of our State, to wit, the three congressional districts on the extreme western side and one on the extreme southern side of the State, received a greater allotment of acreage this year as a result of that gadget than they would have received otherwise.

The following tables, prepared by the Department of Agriculture, show the effect which may be expected in the way of shifts in cotton acreage allotments between the congressional districts of Texas and the effect of this legislation on the counties of the Eleventh Congressional District of Texas. I am sorry I do not have the same figures for all of the counties of the State.

NOTE.—The above-indicated allotments are theoretical and would be subject to change because of actions taken by the State committee with respect to the State acreage reserve, change in the national acreage allotment and additional revision in basic data for the base years. The above-indicated allotments are based on (a) an assumed national acreage allotment of 21,000,000 acres, and (b) apportionment of all of the State acreage allotment under the basic formula provided in Public Law 272 and H. R. 9109 without retaining any State acreage reserve.

Seventeen congressional districts in Texas, all of the districts of the State except 4—17 congressional districts in Texas—received less cotton as a result of the operation of the gadget than they would have received had we received the 4-year history, including war crops, to which we were plainly entitled, until our State was placed under a special gadget for which we did not ask. Bear this in mind, those of you who are not from Texas, bear this in mind, that this bill does not change the total Texas State allotment. This proviso referred to in nowise bears upon the question of how much acreage the State of Texas gets or what percentage of the national allotment our State gets. The State of Texas will receive the same percentage of the national allotment under this bill that it will receive under the existing law if it is left unchanged. It does not make any difference to those who live in other States of the Union whether Texas operates under the provisions of this law or operates under the provisions of the present law. The State as a whole will get exactly the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. POAGE. The State of Texas will receive the same State allotment under this bill and under the present law. The only question involved is, How will it be distributed within the State of Texas? We are asking that it be distributed within the State of Texas on the same basis that cotton acreage is distributed in the State of Mississippi, in the State of Georgia; that is all we are asking. We are asking that in the State of Texas each county get its cotton allotment on the basis of the 4 years' history, including war crops. That is the way they get it in North Carolina.

I want to clearly point out that no man can have grown war crops where cotton was not grown before. While war crops are those crops which the Government asked farmers to grow as a result of the war need, it does not follow that all of these crops are war crops. Peanuts, grain sorghums, and flax, may all be war crops if they took the place of cotton, but not all peanuts, not all grain sorghums, or all flax was war crops by any means. Unless the farm had a cotton allotment at the beginning of the war, it could never grow any war crops. No farm could ever grow more war crops than it had been growing cotton, and it could only get war-crop credit to the extent that it diverted cotton acreage into the needed crop. If the farm grew more peanuts or maize than it has previously grown in cotton, there was no increase in its cotton allotment. For instance, a given farm of 100 acres had a 50-acre cotton allotment in 1941, and grew no maize that year. In 1945, '46, or '47 that farm planted 50 acres of maize and no cotton. All the maize would be war crops, but if that same farm planted 50 acres of maize and 50 acres of cotton, it would have no war crop. If it planted only 20 acres of cotton in 1945 and 50 acres of maize, only 30 acres of the maize would be war crops. The point I want to make clear is that no credit was ever given for war crops which had not previously been given for cotton. The loose statement that farms which never planted cotton got credit for war crops simply will not hold up.

It was suggested a while ago that this bill propose to do something special for the State of Texas. All we are asking is that you take us out from under any special gadget. We do not want to be under any special gadget; we want to be treated like the rest of the United States. We are just asking to be treated like everyone else; we are just asking that we be given our 4-year history, including our war crops. We ask that the Texas State acreage be allocated to the counties of Texas on the regular 4-year history. This year our counties get their allotments on the basis of a cotton history of 2 years. The individual within the county who had not grown any cotton within those 2 years, but who grew war crops back 2 years before that time, was still considered, and will be considered, if you do not pass this bill, as an old cotton grower, and he will be entitled to share in the amount of cotton that there is in the county. If there were but 200 acres in the county farmed by two growers, one who had grown 100 acres of cotton in the years 1947 and 1948 and the other with 100 acres which he had planted in war crops in 1946 and 1947, the county would get an allotment based on a history of only 100 acres. But it would have to be divided between the two growers. The result has been grievous inequity in all of that vast area of Texas where there had been a substantial amount of war crops grown. We ask that you let us make sure that next year in Texas the same formula will prevail for the distribution of cotton that we have in the nongadget States of the United States.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. FISHER. Of course, under old Public Law 12 the cotton farmers of Texas and every other cotton-growing State in the country were assured by the Federal Government in that law that they would be given credit for the war crops.

Mr. POAGE. That is right.

Mr. FISHER. Therefore, the good faith of the Federal Government is involved in seeing that that promise or that assurance is carried out.

Mr. POAGE. I think it is just as much the obligation of the United States Government to carry out that assurance as it is for the United States Government to make good on its promise to pay a dollar for a dollar bill.

Mr. FISHER. If Texas is treated the same as other cotton producing States of the South, that will be carried out.

Mr. POAGE. Yes. All we are asking is that we be given the benefit of the law as it reads, that we be treated the same as everybody else. This year there was a different treatment accorded Texas. It was a treatment that was calculated to take care of the situation the gentleman from California described a while ago in those States where there had been an influx of people; but applied in Texas where many of those people had moved on west, it worked a grievous injustice. We are not asking that you change it for those sections of the Nation, those States that want it; we merely say that we do not want it in Texas. It so happened that there were 355,000 acres of cotton allotted in one congressional district of Texas that did not belong there under the regular 4-year history including war crops as provided by general law.

Mr. COOLEY. Who represents that district?

Mr. POAGE. Mr. MAHON.

Mr. COOLEY. How many acres did his district get?

Mr. POAGE. His district got over 2,000,000 acres; but he got 355,000 acres as a result of this 93 acres that the Department of Agriculture placed in the State of Texas.

Mr. COOLEY. But for that miscalculation in the Department of Agriculture he would not have gotten this additional acreage?

Mr. POAGE. The 93 acres caused the situation. We are merely asking that that 355,000 acres be distributed back into those districts of Texas from which it was taken; back into that area Mr. BECKWORTH spoke about, back into all that area that was growing that cotton and that had built this history in the manner provided by law, rather than to give it to an area which was getting a very generous allotment anyway. This acreage went into an area where many counties are able to plant more than half their total farm land in cotton. It came from an area where many counties were cut to less than 10 percent of their tilled acres.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes. The gentleman, who is a very distinguished member of the House Committee on Agriculture, who is now addressing the House, is likewise a member of the cotton subcommittee, is that true?

Mr. POAGE. That is true.

Mr. COOLEY. Not only is the great State of Texas represented on our committee by the distinguished gentleman who is now speaking but has been constantly represented by another Member of Congress from the State of Texas?

Mr. POAGE. That is right.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman is satisfied with the fairness of this bill that we now have under consideration?

Mr. POAGE. I am. I think this bill corrects a serious injustice within the State of Texas.

Mr. COOLEY. I am delighted to hear the gentleman say so.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WHITE of California. I may say that I am very appreciative of the great assistance the gentleman endeavored to render to me in trying to get a just and fair alloment of cotton for California in the previous bills. As the gentleman well knows—I think it is common knowledge—I am not satisfied with the allotments which California will receive in 1952 and 1953 which came out of the so-called Memphis agreement. The gentleman will recall that I offered a proviso at that time which would have alleviated that situation for California and put it on an equitable basis clear through the years.

Mr. POAGE. I remember that.

Mr. WHITE of California. I deeply appreciate his assistance. It recalls to my mind that the thing that caused the gentleman's trouble about which he is now complaining and which this bill would correct, is the fact that he was trying to give us a square deal in California. I hope every Member of the California delegation will vote with the gentleman in protecting the portion of the bill which he seeks to have retained.

Mr. POAGE. I thank the gentleman. I appreciate that coming from the gentleman.

Mr. GUILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GUILL. Is it mandatory at this time in this bill that the State committee shall retain 10 percent?

Mr. POAGE. It is mandatory that the State committee shall retain enough cotton, not to exceed 10 percent, to make adjustments in county allotments for trends in acreage, for abnormal conditions adversely affecting plantings, for incomplete or inaccurate basic county cotton data, and, upon proper showing by the county committee, for inequitable county allotments; and for new farms, small farms, for farms adversely affected by abnormal conditions affecting plantings, and for adjustments by the county committee in other farm acreage allotments in counties in which the 15-percent reserve is insufficient to provide equitable farm allotments.

The State committee must preserve enough acreage to make these adjustments provided it does not exceed 10 percent.

Mr. GUILL. Will the distinguished gentleman answer this question? Our distinguished chairman made this statement that one reason we had trouble before was because some of the State committees failed to retain enough acreage to take care of the situation.

Mr. POAGE. That is right.

Mr. GUILL. And this bill will rectify that mistake?

Mr. POAGE. This bill will place the burden on the State committee and the obligation by law to reserve enough acreage to make the adjustments I mentioned. In our State it will mean that the State committee can reserve three-quarters of a million acres of cotton, and I believe with three-quarters of a million acres of cotton they can take care of a great many of those trends and a great many of the small farmers that the gentleman from east Texas discussed. He got 50 acres from the State reserve for his entire district last year for new farmers when the State could have distributed three-quarters of a million acres. The bill says they have got to do that in order to take care of these cases.

Mr. GUILL. I have two different types of farmers in my district; the old farmer and the new trend. I want to be in the position where some of the new farmers can have a little extra cotton this year, just the same as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH]. If I knew that that was going to happen, I would be happy.

Mr. POAGE. The State committee is required by this bill to reserve enough to take care of these trends.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. Did I hear the gentleman say that somebody had made a mistake in allocating cotton acreage in Texas or in the United States; a mistake of over 300,000 acres?

Mr. POAGE. I did not say that. I said that I thought a mistake was made, whether it was a mistake or whether it was intentional, at least, a miscalculation of cotton acreage in the State of Texas, which brought the State of Texas under the California gadget by 93 acres, thereby resulting in transferring 355,000 acres from 17 districts of Texas into 1 district of Texas; yes, sir.

Mr. JENSEN. Who made the mistake?

Mr. POAGE. The Department of Agriculture.

Mr. JENSEN. Does the gentleman think it was a mistake?

Mr. POAGE. I think it was one of those mistakes that were intended to be made.

Mr. JENSEN. And the gentleman has done nothing about it?

Mr. POAGE. Yes; we have done a whole lot about it.

Mr. JENSEN. What have you done?

Mr. POAGE. We have had them before us day after day.

Mr. JENSEN. But you have accomplished nothing.

Mr. POAGE. We are trying to accomplish something right now. This very legislation will accomplish a correction of this situation.

Mr. JENSEN. I am not opposing this legislation, the gentleman understands.

Mr. POAGE. I know. This is the first chance we had to come before this House, and this bill will accomplish something if you pass this, and we will have a clear understanding in black and white. We think Texas should be treated like any other State in the Union, and that is what we are asking.

Mr. JENSEN. This man that got this job done must be a powerful gentleman. I would like to know him.

Mr. POAGE. I do not say that anything was done intentionally by anyone who could profit by it.

Mr. JENSEN. I was afraid of that.

Mr. POAGE. I do not want to state that at all. I do not mean to suggest that any of my colleagues deliberately made this miscalculation.

Mr. JENSEN. Do the people appreciate it? I hope they do.

Mr. POAGE. He was returned by a wonderful majority, and I am glad he was, because he is an excellent Member of this House. He just got something he had not expected. Now he hates to give it up.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. Is it not fair to say that the gentleman who represents that district did not know anything about it until it all happened?

Mr. POAGE. That is right.

Mr. COOLEY. Neither did the gentleman who is now addressing the House know anything about it until it was brought to his attention.

Mr. POAGE. On the contrary I had received the assurance of the representatives of the Department that Texas could not possibly come under the terms of the special gadget.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, then somebody down in the Department of Agriculture must have made a mistake; is that not true?

Mr. POAGE. That is exactly what I say, the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. JENSEN. Is this a fair example of the kind of figuring they do down there?

Mr. POAGE. I do not think it is a fair example. I think it is a very unfair proposition, and I think it was deliberately unfair. I think it was intended to accomplish a repudiation of the promise this Congress made in Public Law No. 12.

Mr. JENSEN. Well, is it a good example?

Mr. POAGE. It is a bad example, a very bad example.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to section 8 of this bill, which I conceive to be of considerable importance, and which probably has been and may be overlooked in the press of considering the acreage allotments. This bill contains on page 17 in section 8 a proviso extending the powers granted by the Soil Conservation Domestic Allotment Act to the PMA to carry on what we generally know as the soil conservation program, not the United States Soil Conservation Service but the soil conservation program under which the PMA sponsors soil-conservation practices. It involves vitally farmers all over the United States. If this bill or some other bill containing a similar provision is not passed at this session you will not have, after the 1st day of January, the continuation of this soil conservation program of the PMA. If you do not have it, you all realize what it is going to mean in the way of a breakdown of the program in your area, because the present law, which expires on that date, or at least it puts this work in the hands of the States rather than the Federal Government. Practically no State is ready to undertake it.

Earlier this afternoon I suggested that I would offer an amendment in regard to wheat. That that record may be clear as to the basis of the agreement in this regard, I insert a letter which I received this morning from the Department of Agriculture, which I believe explains the situation.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., July 27, 1950.

Hon. W. R. POAGE,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Wheat, House Committee on Agriculture, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. POAGE: This is in reply to your request for a statement with respect to the policies and statistical methods to be followed in the apportionment of the 1951 national wheat-acreage allotment to States and counties.

On July 14, 1950, the Secretary of Agriculture proclaimed a national wheat-acreage allotment for the 1951 crop of 72,784,810 acres. In arriving at this acreage for the national allotment, due consideration was given to the need for maintaining an adequate supply to meet such emergencies as may arise out of the Korean war situation. The national allotment as determined provides for an acreage in 1951 equivalent to the 1050 allotment, including the additional acreage resulting from the application of the provisions of section 5, Public Law 272, which was approximately equal to the acreage actually seeded to wheat for harvest in 1950.

The national allotment as originally announced by the Secretary for the 1950 crop of wheat was 68,944,099 acres. To this allotment was added 3,831,754 acres under the provisions of Public Law 272, which resulted in a total allotment for the 1950 crop of 72,775,853 acres.

Although for the United States as a whole no reduction from the 1950 acreage is called for in 1951, the determination of State and county allotments by the application of trend adjustments would result in allotments for some States and counties being less than was assigned for the 1950 crop. In other instances, trend adjustments would result in allotments for 1951 being in excess of the allotment assigned for 1950. These shifts in acreage would be especially pronounced in some States due to the fact that a considerable portion of the Public Law 272 acreage would be prorated to other States if the standard trend adjustment formula were employed. To minimize this shift in wheat-acreage allotments, and to provide for a more equitable apportionment of the national allotment to States and counties, the Department has modified the trend adjustment formula to limit the extent of change which otherwise would result from such adjustments.

This modified formula is as follows:

(a) After making necessary adjustments for abnormal weather conditions, war crop credits, and the acreage diverted from wheat under previous AAA programs, the 10-year average acreage seeded for the production of wheat in each State during the years 1940–49, inclusive, is adjusted for trends by averaging such 10-year average with the average acreage seeded to wheat during the years 1947–49. This is the standard formula for making adjustments for trends in acreage for both wheat and corn.

(b) The tentative State allotment is computed by apportioning the national acreage allotment to States pro rata on the basis of the 10-year average as adjusted for trends under (a) above.

(c) The tentative allotment to any State which falls below an amount determined by multiplying the average acreage seeded to wheat in such State during the years 1947–49 by a factor obtained by (1) dividing the 1951 national allotment by the average acreage seeded to wheat in the United States during such 3-year period and (2) reducing the percentage figure obtained under (1) by five percentage points shall be adjusted upward to such amount.

(d) The tentative allotments to States not receiving adjustments under (c) above are adjusted pro rata so that the sum of all State allotments is equal to the national acreage allotment.

The national acreage allotment for the 1951 crop of wheat will be apportioned to States on the basis of the foregoing formula.

Basically this modified trend formula will be followed in the apportionment of the State allotment to counties. At the county level consideration will be given to additional information when making adjustments between counties. The use of PMA records of the acreage seeded to wheat as reported to county committees by producers will enable State committees to obtain a more equitable alinement of counties for the apportionment of the State allotment.

It is believed that by apportioning the national allotment to States as indicated above, and by following the same method generally in apportioning the State allotment to counties, equitable allotments for the 1951 crop of wheat may be established within the national allotment as proclaimed by the Secretary.

With State and county allotments determined in this manner, it seems that there would be no need for the pending legislation as set forth in section 6 of H. R. 9109, and we recommend its deletion from the bill.

Sincerely yours,

FRANK K. WOOLLEY,
Deputy Administrator.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS].

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I take this time to inform the House that I have today introduced a bill to create a mobilization and production board and a food conservation agency, following out the recommendations made yesterday by Bernard Baruch, for the reason that while this debate is going on as to whether we should have rationing and controls some management is urgently required. We have learned from experience in World War II that we cannot get high-level management to do the kind of mobilization job which the Nation faces except by the creation of an agency of this kind which will attract the best brains in business, labor, and agriculture.

I have provided in this bill for the creation of a food conservation agency because, again, consumers need advice, consumers need guidance, and the distributors and producers of the country also need guidance and mobilization to resist what can easily become an economic disaster in the hoarding and panic buying which is going on.

We know that 90 percent of the Americans are patriotic and are restraining themselves and imposing self-discipline upon themselves, but there is always the unscrupulous 10 percent.

I invite consideration, therefore, to this urgent need for establishing this major agency, a mobilization and production board, which will give us the kind of high-level management we learned to value so highly in World War II and which this present mobilization effort so urgently requires.

I thank my colleague for giving me this time.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. WERDEL].

Mr. WERDEL. Mr. Chairman, I regret my physical condition has not been such that I could keep current on some of the details of this bill. I also regret that I do not see more members of the Committee on Agriculture present. I think some of the remarks I am going to make should be made by a member of that committee.

I know any time we have a statute on the books of any government, State or national, which undertakes to interfere with the economy of the country and its citizens we then set up a statutory provision which lashes us session after session around a vicious circle of occasional argument and temporary expedient. Argument for the occasion, if you please, and in most instances we develop a temporary political expedient. To be sure, I am not speaking on a partisan basis, and I am not speaking to you solely for the interest of the State of California. What I have to say is, I think, in the vital interest of the whole people of this great country and the war effort we have to make.

There have been many remarks made by previous speakers which are both amusing and interesting. It has been said that never have we allocated wheat or cotton or commodities on a population basis within the States. Yet another gentleman says: What are our people in Texas going to do if in a free competitive market we let cotton go to another area? Of course the answer to that question is that those people would do the same thing that his people do when they leave Texas and go to California, and I am one of those who is inclined to think that many of you gentlemen represent people who are temporarily creating problems for you which will be permanent problems for me and my colleagues from California because you represent people who to a large extent, by the evidence of the hour, are on their way to California. We are getting about 28,000 new people a month in the State of California.

I believe a little background to what I want to say is necessary.

In the first place, in the 1938 act we had in California what the rest of the Nation had—a permanent law that some way or other had to be lived with, and whether we liked the basic principle of the law or not is immaterial at this time. The point is that in a free competitive economy during the war the West, the country that could grow the commodities which we needed during the war, took the acreage on a competitive basis. Of course there were other acts passed during the war which helped certain areas of the country and the Congress guaranteed those people a cotton history if they raised certain war commodities. It is all well and good to stand up here and speak patriotically of your district which raised war crops. But the answer is that the people in those districts who raised such crops did so because they made more money out of those crops.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WERDEL. I yield.

Mr. PACE. I think the gentleman will find upon examination of the record that the return per acre during the war on cotton exceeded the return per acre on most of the war crops, certainly on peanuts. May I repeat that, that the return to the producer per acre during the war on cotton exceeded the return per acre on peanuts.

Mr. WERDEL. I respect the distinguished gentleman, who is chairman of the Subcommittee on Cotton for his ability and his knowledge of the subject of agriculture. I believe his remark is not pertinent to what I have in mind.

Mr. PACE. If the gentleman will yield. I did not want to make an impertinent remark. I thought the gentleman said that people had gotten into raising cotton because they made more money out of it. I wanted to cite the fact that that did not apply in the case of peanuts.

Mr. WERDEL. I would say to the gentleman from Georgia that I know nothing about peanuts, except that I like them at ball games. I do know something about human nature and I doubt if there was anyone raising peanuts during the war who thought he could make more money raising cotton. There may have been 1, there may have been 10, but the fact remains that we have before us a bill to perpetuate cotton acreage in the South during wartime. It is also a fact that the same gentlemen who proposed this bill submitted to the Congress a bill during the last war which permitted a war crop history for cotton acreage. That law did not command farmers to raise war crops. It let them do it on a competitive basis if they thought they could make more money.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WERDEL. Not at this time, please. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] has made a very true statement when he says that the Secretary of Agriculture must see that we must raise cotton sufficient to equal the estimated consumption, plus exports, plus 30 percent. I believe that is a reasonable interpretation of the language of the bill before the House. But that is not the point. The point is that section 1 of this bill will provide that the Secretary must put on controls if the total supply of cotton for the marketing year, beginning in the then current calendar year, exceeds the estimated domestic consumption, plus exports for such marketing year. The 30-percent provision is out, at least for the years 1951 and 1952; and the permanent pattern for permanent controls, regardless of market conditions, is placed in the law by the pending act.

I will offer an amendment to put that language back as it is in existing law. I will offer that at the proper time, unless my colleague from California offers a similar amendment, in which case I will support his amendment.

Mr. WHITE of California. If the gentleman will yield, I have such an amendment already prepared, and it is my intention to offer it.

Mr. WERDEL. I will be happy to support your amendment.

The reasons for the amendment are these: In competitive years in California, when California's cotton acreage grew from 385,000 acres to over a million acres of planted cotton—when its economy in that field demanded that cotton gins, oil-reduction plants, and cotton compressors be built and financed, and a labor supply planned for the industry—with support prices, California farmers developed marginal land for cotton.

The act passed in the first session of this Congress gave such marginal land history. The same act took over 300,000 acres of California's best land out of the production of cotton.

When the controls went back on and the act last year was passed we in California found that we had marginal land actually worth more money than better land close to it for the purposes of raising cotton. We found that we had created a situation such as California created when it granted liquor licenses at no cost to the licensee a few years back. We now find those licenses selling for $20,000, because new ones are not allowed unless population increase reaches a certain point. This created an artificial condition. I submit to you that H. R. 9109 creates the same artificial condition for approximately 7,000,000 acres of marginal land to the old cotton States.

I want to direct your attention to figures that have today been compiled for me by the Congressional Library. Mississippi in 1930 raised 4,163,000 acres of cotton. In the five competitive years prior to 1945, war years, it raised an average of 2,286,000 acres of cotton.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WERDEL. I yield.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Would the gentleman give the production by bales? He is speaking of the acreage planted.

Mr. WERDEL. I think I have it; I will get to it in a moment.

Mr. ABERNETHY. The fact is that the production was almost identical although the acreage was considerably less, was just about half.

Mr. WERDEL. That may be true.

Louisiana had a production in 1930 of 1,900,000. In the five competitive years prior to 1945, competitive free enterprise years, it averaged 819,000 acres. Alabama had 3,596,000 acres in 1930, but the 1945 average showed she had 1,390,000 acres. Georgia in 1930 had 3,464,000 acres; the 1945 average gave her 1,260,000 acres, and so on for the 11 southern cotton States.

Mr. Chairman, section 1 of this bill provides that even though yesterday in a war effort when we had to produce war crops at full capacity, we produced cotton on a competitive basis. The proposed amendment to section 342 will have the Agriculture Act, as amended, say that for the years 1951–52 controls are mandatory, regardless of the condition of the market or the needs of the country. If the Department of Agriculture follows the law, under no circumstances will it find itself in a position where controls are not mandatory by the new language. The new language, therefore, says that even though we know that on a competitive basis, during a war effort, yesterday about 7,000,000 acres in the South was marginal land and voluntarily stopped growing cotton. We are now going to make it mandatory that about 26 acres of that marginal land must be planted to cotton to 1 acre of land in the Western States—States that yesterday demonstrated it was the proper land to raise cotton in a war effort.

The new language in H. R. 9109 says that even though we may need 3,000,000 acres of cotton in 1951 and 1952, the existing cotton gins, cotton-oil plants, and cotton compressors of the Western States must operate at less than capacity until the marginal land of the South is planted. There is no discretion in this regard left with the Secretary of Agriculture, and, in my opinion, the law would be bad if any man had such discretion to accomplish the proposed result. The proposed amendment forces the same ratio of acreage between the States under mandatory controls into the years 1951 and 1952.

As an example, Mississippi now has a State allotment of about 2,000,000 acres, whereas California's acreage is about 685,000 acres.

If the Secretary finds it necessary to quickly expand cotton production, he will have to require Mississippi to raise 3 acres of cotton to California's 1 acre, even though it has been demonstrated that any large expansion of production in Mississippi would require the planting of marginal land.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WERDEL. I yield.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I think I understand the gentleman's point, but I think he overlooked, unintentionally, I am sure, the production figures. I do not have all of the acreage records for the years he mentioned, but I do have the records for the last 22 years.

Mr. WERDEL. These are the average acreage for 5-year periods.

Mr. ABERNETHY. In 1928, Mississippi, to which the gentleman referred, planted 3,954,000 acres of cotton and produced at that time under the farming practices as of that day only 1,475,000 bales.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Now, 20 years later, the State planted 1,400,000 less acres, but produced almost a million more bales of cotton.

Mr. WERDEL. The figures I quoted for 1945 were the 5-year average up to 1945 during this competitive free enterprise year in the production of cotton. I am not making any remarks about the depth of the topsoil of Mississippi. I am talking about facts. In the year 1930 the population of Mississippi was 2,821,000. In 1940 the population was 2,183,000. In the estimate as for 1950 it has fallen to 2,171,000.

The gentleman remarked about bales of cotton. I have asked them to compile figures as to how much they have gained by the agricultural program in the South.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WERDEL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman be willing to place his cotton acreage on the same 5-year base that the rest of us base ours on? Just answer that. Will he be willing to base his acreage on the same 5-year history that we base ours on?

Mr. WERDEL. No, because the gentleman said a while ago when he had the floor that something was given the State of California. The only thing that has been given California is population, if we look upon this country as a free enterprise country. A controlled program for agriculture must consider population shifts in peacetime economy and maximum production with the least effort in a wartime economy.

In California a small ranch is 40 acres with its water well and its development. In the South, where I have not been too often, cotton raising reaches a peculiar economic extreme. In that extreme we see a mule being used to drag a meadow buster down through the meadow. We then see a little seed planted and the farmer praying for rain. He then goes cat fishing and lays in the shade, and sends a new population to California. If it rains, he may pick 180 pounds of cotton to the acre. Yes, he may pick a bale of cotton.

My figures indicate that the average planting in Mississippi for the 5 years prior to 1945 was about one-half of that State's planting in 1930. In 1930, Mississippi's income from cotton was about $71,000,000, whereas in 1945 her income was about $185,000,000. In other words, by planting one-half the average she received two and one-half times as much in revenue. My figures also indicate that by planting approximately the same average in the 5-year period, preceding 1940, as she did in 1945, she received three times as much revenue in 1945, as she did in 1940.

Mr. Chairman, if you say you are giving something to California, and you have a statute on the books which is being amended by the proposed legislation, it should be understood that you are only tempering existing law that has already placed California in a strait-jacket against the interests of the economy of that growing State and against the interests of the whole country if we must make a war effort.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, the gentleman indicated that we have produced six times as much wealth on one-half as much land, and at the same time he made the remark that we were cat fishing down our way. That does not appear to be so, does it?

Mr. WERDEL. It is in effect true in general terms. It is true of Alabama and it is true of Georgia.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WERDEL. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. After listening to the gentleman I wonder if he feels he is making a contribution to the adjustment of cotton acreage in 20 cotton States by making these comparisons between the States, which may not be so graciously received. You know, this question was settled among all the States last year. I wonder if we should not go back to the States if we want to change the agreement that has been made.

Mr. WERDEL. In answer to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia I will say this: When the representatives of the cotton people of California were out here and I had an opportunity to talk to them and they had an opportunity to talk to the committee, the subject mentioned by me in connection with the new language in the first paragraph was not considered or discussed. And it came out of committee suddenly and without notice either to my constituents or to myself. I am firmly convinced that it must be opposed by all of the Western States. The remarks I am making are for the interest not only of California but of the war effort that I sincerely believe must be made in the immediate future. In answer I will say only this, that we as a nation of 150,000,000 people, working 5 days a week, apparently squared off on the outside of a circle against 190,000,000 people working 7 days a week, 12 hours a day, with 700,000,000 additional people to use as pawns, and satellites to create trouble, we have a full day's work ahead of us. Russia has put a mirror behind our ability to produce, our ability to transport, our ability to mobilize. She studies our every effort. Gentlemen, we in this Congress who will not stand up and say the American people have to go to work and produce the necessities of this war on the best available land are doing an injustice not only to the West but to the American people as a whole. I understand, and I am very much disturbed that no request was made of the Department of Agriculture for an opinion on this legislation. If I am wrong, I want to be corrected. I also understand that Mr. Ralph S. Trigg, Administrator, Production and Marketing Administration, has expressed himself as opposed to the discriminatory provisions of H. R. 9109.

If I am wrong, I want to be corrected. Gentlemen, we have before us a bill that has to be amended in the interests of our country.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WERDEL. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. What are the discriminatory provisions of this bill? Before the gentleman answers that, may I make one brief observation that the great State of California, like the great State of Texas, has been very ably and well represented on our committee at all times by two distinguished Members of this House, one on the gentleman's side and one on our side.

Mr. WERDEL. I realize that.

Mr. COOLEY. And I know that they have been wide awake and alert at all times in an effort to look after the cotton farmers of California. Now, what are these discriminatory provisions? The gentleman stated a moment ago he was not willing to be treated as other cotton-growing States with reference to the 5-year historic basis. He wants some special treatment, something more given to California than has been given to the other cotton-growing States of the Union. I think the gentlemen from California [Mr. WHITE and Mr. BRAMBLETT] have looked after the interests of California at all times on our committee.

Mr. WERDEL. Apparently I did not make myself understood.

Any provision in the agricultural law which prohibits us from making our maximum effort in time of war, or which freezes production of basic agricultural commodities in particular areas of our country, with price supports for those areas, must at least take into consideration population shifts in times of either war or peace.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I take this time in order that the House may know the program for next week from my distinguished friend the majority leader.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am very glad my friend has asked that. I have the program arranged for next week.

On Monday there will be a continuation of the consideration of this bill, under the 5-minute rule—that is, the cotton acreage allotment and marketing quotas bill. If that is disposed of in time we will take up H. R. 5967, the freight forwarders bill.

There will be a recess on Monday at 12:15 to meet members of the Japanese Diet on the floor, and to greet other distinguished Japanese visitors in the gallery. There will be no joint session, however.

On Tuesday there will be a short recess to receive the Prime Minister of Australia, the Honorable Robert Gordon Menzies. There will be no joint session. It will be a session of the House.

On Tuesday H. R. 9176, the Defense Production Act of 1950, will be taken up and its consideration will proceed until it is completed. If the freight forwarders bill is not disposed of on Monday, that will be displaced by the Defense Production Act of 1950.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. We expect that general debate on the defense bill will take all day Tuesday?

Mr. McCORMACK. I think so. I do not know what the rule will provide as to general debate. However, Tuesday is a primaries day, and we have the usual understanding that if there should be any roll calls they will go over to the next day.

I see my friend from Massachusetts assumes that that bill will not be disposed of on Tuesday, and my assumption is the same, but its consideration will continue until it is completed.

If the freight forwarders bill is not disposed of on Monday, it will be brought up again at the completion of the consideration of the Defense Production Act, unless in the meanwhile other legislation with priority should be reported out of committee and a rule be granted on it.

Following that will be the Federal judgeship bills, which I am bringing up when opportunity presents itself.

I have an important announcement to make in connection with the Social Security conference report. It will be brought up on Friday, August 5. I would have liked to bring it up on Thursday, but on that day, again, primaries are being held in some States, Tennessee, for instance, so the social-security conference report is assigned definitely for Friday, August 5.

Other conference reports may be brought up at any time. Of course, we understand that the leadership on the minority side will be advised in advance if any are to come up.

Any further program for next week will be announced later.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is it the intention to adjourn tonight until Monday?

Mr. McCORMACK. We are going to adjourn tonight until Monday.

Mr. HOPE. I have no further requests for time on this side.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee on cotton, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have as close attention as possible that I may undertake to go through the bill and explain its provisions. I shall try to speak clearly and carefully, because by reason of the fact that I speak in behalf of the subcommittee, what I say will become a part of the legislative history of the legislation.

In the last Congress we enacted a new cotton-quota law, generally referred to as Public Law 272 of the Eightieth Congress. In my judgment, it was a good law. In my judgment, if it had been administered according to the intentions of the committee, most of the difficulties which have been cited would never have occurred. Under that law there has not been a single complaint made to the committee with regard to the allocation of acreage among the States. That is, as far as we were advised, every State was satisfied with its 1950 State acreage allotment; that is, its part of the national acreage. Outside of the great State of Texas, there were very few complaints, if any, with regard to the allotments made to the respective counties within the States. The complaints, almost entirely, have been the allocation of the county acreage among the individual farmers. For my part, I am not trying to blame anybody. I recognize it was a new law; there were few records available; the law was passed late in the year; the regulations were late in being issued and distributed; but if the law had been administered according to the intention and philosophy of the committee, I do not think there would have been any serious difficulty.

I should like to state what that philosophy is. I do not think anybody should attempt to legislate here until they do understand the policy or the philosophy of the committee in this legislation.

We have 20 States growing cotton. There are local problems within every State, but in almost every State they are different. Texas, for example, has problems that nobody else has. It has the great plains. It has its enormous new areas. California has its problems. Mississippi has its problems. My State has its problems. It is utterly impossible to legislate on a national basis and solve these local problems with one law. You just cannot have a rule that would apply to them all. If you should try to enact a rule, you would necessarily have to make 20 exceptions before you could operate under it.

Consequently, this is the philosophy of the committee. It was the philosophy of the bill last year, and it is the philosophy of the bill before you now. Please understand it. It is to give to every State its fair portion of the national acreage allotment; and, as I said, every State has been satisfied with what it received in 1950.

We then make it a State matter; we make it a home-rule affair; we give the great State of Mississippi, for example, so many acres for cotton and then we leave it to the State PMA committee in Mississippi and the county PMA committees in the counties of Mississippi to administer the law. We give them the discretion, and we give them the authority to meet these local problems, to adjust these inequities, and to do what is the overriding purpose of this legislation, to assure the State, the county, and every cotton farmer a fair and equitable allotment of cotton acreage.

It is a home-rule bill; we give to the State what it is entitled to, and then we direct the State authorities to administer the law within that State. This bill contributes further to that philosophy; it increases the discretion of the State committee and the county committees. We hope, to be sure, that we shall not have to come back here next year and enact another emergency bill like we did the early part of this year.

The law, as we seek to amend it, would provide generally that whenever the supply of cotton exceeds a normal supply, that is, whenever it exceeds the estimated domestic consumption of cotton, the estimated exports, plus 30 percent, the Secretary of Agriculture shall proclaim quotas; then it becomes the right and responsibility of the cotton farmers to decide whether or not they want those quotas put into effect, and just one man more than one-third of the voting cotton producers can stop it. There must be at least two-thirds approving the proclamation of quotas.

To give you an example that you may understand it, let us say that the estimated domestic consumption is 8,500,000 bales; that the estimated exports is 4,500,000 bales; those total 13,000,000.

Thirty percent of that is 3,900,000. The 13,000,000 plus the 3,900,000 is 16,900,000 bales. Whenever the supply of cotton exceeds 16,900,000 bales the Secretary must under such conditions, proclaim quotas.

It is now estimated that next week, the first day of August, the carry-over or surplus of cotton will be 7,000,000 bales; it is estimated that the acreage we have planted in cotton this year will produce between 10,000,000 and 10,500,000—some figure around 10,300,000 bales. There is a normal import of cotton into this country of 250,000 bales. The carry-over of 7,000,000 bales and the imports together total 7,250,000. Add to this the crop this year of around 10,300,000 bales and you have a total supply for the coming season of 17,550,000 bales of cotton. If you have this supply of 17,550,000, then, after deducting the estimated domestic consumption and exports, totaling 13,000,000 bales, you will be left with a carry-over on August 1, 1951, of 4,550,000 bales. If you should raise the estimate on domestic consumption and exports to 13,500,000 you would still be left with a surplus or carry-over of 4,050,000 bales, or 30 percent.

This bill provides a definite plan for allotting acreage to counties and to farms next year, 1951; it also provides a special plan for 1952; then it is provided that thereafter the allotments shall be entirely on the basis of the acreage planted in cotton during the preceding 3 years.

The committee is recommending the approval of section 1 of this bill which, for these 2 years, changes the conditions under which the Secretary shall order quotas by providing that if the supply exceeds the estimated domestic consumption and estimated exports, then he shall proclaim quotas. It is admitted that this makes quotas more certain in 1951 and 1952. I think it is of the greatest importance that this provision remain in the bill.

You hear distinguished gentlemen come here and say they do not want quotas next year, that they want the chance to plant much more cotton and increase their base acreage. Let us see what would happen. Suppose we do not have quotas next year. Every Member of Congress from a cotton-producing district must go home and notify his cotton producers that the race is on, that the man who grows the most cotton is going to get the biggest allotment in the future. From my study and from my experience we will have another 1937.

What happened in 1937? In the fall of 1936 the Supreme Court of the United States declared the old AAA unconstitutional. There were no quotas on cotton in 1937. The farmers planted 30,000,000 acres of cotton and produced 19,000,000 bales. It took us 7 years, with the aid of a war, to get rid of the surplus cotton produced in 1937.

Another likely effect is the same as we had with respect to the crop last year. They planted so much in 1949 that this committee recommended and the Congress passed a law outlawing the acreage planted in 1949 because it was recognized it would have been unfair to many areas.

I want it clearly understood that notwithstanding the provisions of section 1 of this bill, if the Secretary proclaims quotas next year, he must proclaim a number of bales of cotton, and convert that to acres, to produce not less than the estimated consumption, the estimated exports plus 30 percent, which is a normal supply of cotton under the law. That requirement has not been changed. In addition, as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY], has pointed out, there is retained section 471 of the old law. That section provides: First, if the Secretary of Agriculture, after proclaiming quotas—in October or even after they have been voted on by farmers on December 15—determines that the allotted acreage is not likely to produce a normal supply of cotton, he may do either of two things. He may increase the national acreage, thereby increasing the allotment to every cotton farm in the Nation or he can entirely eliminate or terminate marketing quotas.

Secondly, under section 471, if due to a national emergency—and I think we all agree that we face a national-emergency situation today—or an unanticipated increase in the exports of cotton, likewise the Secretary can either increase the national quota, increase the acreage, or he can entirely terminate quotas and let you plant as much additional cotton as you desire.

I am saying these things to make it crystal clear that there is not anything in this bill or existing law that will in the slightest degree hamper the Secretary of Agriculture in seeing that every bale of cotton is produced that we need for war or for any other purpose.

The bill provides that after a State has received its fair portion of the acreage allotment that the State committee shall reserve an adequate portion of that State allotment, not to exceed 10 percent, as a reserve to be used, as I mentioned a while ago, in meeting problems within the State, in seeing that every producer gets a fair allotment; that every county gets a fair allotment, adequate to take care of the farmers in the county.

I think it is important that you understand what the discretion of the State committee is in the use of this State reserve. Here is what the bill provides. They can use the reserve to adjust allotments to counties for trends in acreage, to meet the situation described here by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE], where some area in his State had a rapid expansion in the production of cotton during the last few years. That is a trend, that is recognized and provided for, and they can give such area additional acreage to take care of that trend. For abnormal conditions adversely affecting planting; for incomplete or inadequate basic county data. We have had some complaints as to BAE figures. The Bureau of Agricultural Economics figures were questioned in some counties. We provide in the bill that if the State committee finds that to be true, they can allot to that county some additional acreage to take care of the error. The State committee can use this reserve to take care of appeals made by counties on the basis of either that their allotment is unfair or they have given too much acreage to some other county in the State. In addition, this State reserve can be used in making allotments to counties for new farms, for small farms, for farms adversely affected by abnormal conditions affecting plantings, that is, for example, where they have had a flood and could not plant their cotton, and for adjustments in the county where the county reserve has not been sufficient to bring about fair and equitable allotments.

Now, how shall the allotment to States be made? Next year, under this bill, the allotment to every State will be the same as it was this year, subject to such adjustment as is necessary by a change in the national acreage allotment. For example, the allotment this year was on the basis of 21,000,000 acres. If the Secretary allots next year 21,000,000 acres, then the allotment to each and every State will be the same as in 1951, which seemed to satisfy all the States. In 1952 the allotments to States shall be on the basis of the 4 years' history, 1946, 1947, 1948, and 1950; that is to say, in 1952 the acreage shall be distributed out among the States according to the amount of acreage they had in cotton during those 4 years. Then, and this is important, in 1953 and thereafter the whole cotton acreage system goes on what we call a historical basis. The allotment to the State, the allotment to the county, the allotment to the individual farm depends on how much cotton has been produced in that State, in that county, and on that farm during the preceding 5 years, of course excluding 1949.

Now, how shall the allotments to counties be made? For 1951 the counties shall receive the same allotments as they did in 1950, this year, with such adjustments as the State committee may make out of the State reserve. In 1952 there is no change in the law as it is today; that is to say, the county allotment shall be made on the basis of the cotton planted in that county in the years 1946, 1947, 1948, and 1950. Then in 1953 and thereafter, as I have explained, there is no change in the law, and the county allotments will be made entirely on the basis of the amount of cotton produced in the county during the preceding 5 years, excluding 1949.

Let us spend a minute on the allotments to farms. I think you need to follow this rather closely if you want to advise your constituents.

The county committee is directed to reserve in its hands, in the county office, before it makes the general distribution, an adequate acreage to make certain adjustments set out in the act, in no event to exceed 15 percent of the county allotment.

Next year each farm will have a base upon which its allotment is determined. That base will be either the allotment it received this year or, if the owner or operator applies for it, 65 percent of his 3-year average acreage in cotton in 1946, 1947, and 1948, or 45 percent of the highest he planted in any one of those 3 years.

Let me explain that. To try to correct inequities we passed earlier this year what is known as Public Law 471. We provided that any farmer who did not have that much acreage could apply to his county committee and receive an additional allotment up to the higher of 65 percent of the 3-year average he had planted to cotton or 45 percent of the highest acreage he had planted in any one of those 3 years.

Many farmers made application. Thousands of farmers throughout the Nation applied. They are getting the benefit of it now because we are making that their base, what they had this year. The committee feels that there are thousands of farmers who never heard of the provision. It was passed late, there were many farmers who had already planted cotton before the act was passed, and they could not apply. So we provide here that any producer who did not this year avail himself of the 65–45 provision may come in next year to make application and use that as his base. Having set that up as a base, allotments are made to each farm in the county by distributing out, you might say, 85 percent of the country allotment or the county allotment less the reserve. Everybody gets an allotment on the basis of that base. Then it becomes the duty of the county committee to take a look at the tentative allotments made on that basis. They have in their hands up to 15 percent that they reserved. They then have the responsibility of correcting any unfair or inequitable allotments which have been made by the use of the acreage reserved, and also of making adjustments in small farm allotments and allotments to new cotton farms.

They can increase the allotments initially made to bring about fair and equitable allotments in relation to land, labor, and equipment available for the production of cotton. That is, if a man has a large farm and has adequate labor and adequate machinery and adequate land for the production of cotton they can give him an increased cotton acreage allotment in keeping with those factors.

The county committee can take into account crop-rotation practices, that is, whether a farmer has been following reasonable crop-rotation practices. If he has, and if his acreage is small by reason of having followed these helpful practices, they can use this county reserve to allot him additional acreage.

Thirdly, if the county finds that a farmer has a low history because the floods came and he could not plant or for any other reason he did not get an opportunity to plant his cotton the previous year, they can give him an extra allotment to take care of that abnormal condition.

Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said and will be said on Monday about small farms. I want to repeat the same thing I said last year. In my judgment there never has been a quota law passed which took into account so sympathetically the welfare of the small-cotton farmer. This bill seeks to do that and to increase the authority and discretion of the county committee to aid the small farmer. I shall not now attempt to enumerate the provisions, as I am quite sure some amendments will be offered which will give me an opportunity to enumerate the special benefits set up in the bill for the small farmer.

I do want to mention that there is a provision that out of the county reserve at least 20 percent must be used only to increase small cotton farm allotments up to 10 acres. The State committee can, from the reserve, make special allotments to counties to increase small-farm allotments. And any acreage which is surrendered in a county—that is where an allotment is made to me and I do not want to plant cotton, I can surrender it back to the county—and a portion of that is available for making allotments to small farms.

In addition, small farms of over 10 acres may have their allotments increased by the county committee, first by taking into account land, labor, and equipment; secondly, by taking into account crop-rotation practices; thirdly, by taking into consideration abnormal conditions affecting plantings; fourthly, from acreage allotted to the county by the State committee for that purpose; and fifth, from surrendered acreage.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of California. I should like to clear up the matter of this so-called 15-acre build-up. A little controversy has arisen in our area with respect thereto. I wish the gentleman would tell me if this is stated correctly: Under existing law the reservation of acreage for the so-called 15-acre build-up is merely permissive. Under the pending bill the reservation is mandatory, is that correct?

Mr. PACE. Under the pending bill it is mandatory that the county committee use 20 percent of the acreage that the county committee reserves for small farms up to 10 acres.

Mr. WHITE of California. I am coming to that. But is it not a fact that the existing law says "may" and the pending bill says "shall"?

Mr. PACE. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE of California. Therefore it is permissive under the existing law and mandatory in the pending bill which makes the pending bill that much better for the small farmer; and while it is not mandatory that he now be built up to 15 acres it does bring him up to 10 acres for certain if it does not exceed the 20-percent reserve. Is that not right?

Mr. PACE. The gentleman is right, that under this law it requires the county committee to give more consideration to the small farm because it is directed and made mandatory, as the gentleman says, that they reserve adequate acreage, but not to exceed 15 percent of the county allotment, to do these things.

Mr. WHITE of California. I do not want to come on the floor tomorrow and surprise the gentleman with an amendment after talking in this vein. I do feel that the 5-acre proposition is not quite as good in this bill as it is in the old bill. It is my intention to offer an amendment which will keep the 5-acre man from being reduced along with the others of bigger quotas.

Mr. PACE. Due to the lateness of the hour, I shall not undertake to discuss that issue now, but when the gentleman offers his amendment I will try to defend the position of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has again expired.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. PACE. There are numerous provisions for new farms, and I think it is important, because the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH] has very rightfully been interested in the welfare of those who want to go into cotton production. A new farm is one on which cotton has not been planted for the last 3 years. It became necessary, of course, that some definition be made, and that is the definition contained in the act.

It should be understood that there are other special provisions in this act for new farms. Both the State reserve and the county reserve can be used for allotments to new farms. Any acreage that is allotted to a county from the State reserve for new farms or other purposes must be used for that purpose and none other. It is very important that we establish the intent of the committee in the legislative history. Last year in some States, when the State committee allotted acreage to the county from the State reserve for a certain purpose, for some reason the county committees interpreted the law to mean that out of such allotment they received from the State they could use only 15 percent of it for the purposes for which it was given to the county. It is very definitely the intention of the committee and the intention of the law that if, for example, a State committee allots 100 acres or 500 acres to a county for new farms, for small farms or for any of the purposes authorized by the law, that the entire amount allotted to the county by the State can be used and must be used only for the specific purpose for which it is allotted.

I want to say one more thing about new farms. I want to explain to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH] one of the reasons why he had such difficulty in his district last year with new farms. The law provides that a man who wants to get a cotton allotment but who is not producing cotton, shall file an application with his county committee. If I should be such a man, I would go in and file application for an allotment as a new farm. It is contemplated under the law and under this bill that I and you and everybody else in that county who wants a new farm allotment shall make application to the county committee. It is contemplated then that the county committee shall consolidate those applications and send them to the State committee; that thereafter, after every county has received applications for new farms and the county committee has submitted to the State committee a report of its applications for new farm allotments; that then, and not until then, will the State committee attempt to distribute out the acreage it has reserved for making allotments to new farms.

Now, what happened last year? It happened in the great State of Texas and probably in other States. This is not trying to be critical, but it is simply giving an example. Before the farmers of the State of Texas had filed a single application for a new farm allotment, the State committee of the State of Texas distributed out the reserve for new farms. They had no idea how many applications would be made in the county. I heard the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH] say a day or two ago that in one of his counties there were 600 applications for new farms. The State committee, of course, should never have distributed out the reserve to new farmers until those 600 applications had been submitted to the State committee and considered along with the applications filed with the other county committees. I daresay in some counties of Texas there were not over five applications filed for new farms; certainly the State committee should consider the needs in the respective counties for new farm allotments before distributing the reserve.

Mr. COOLEY. Is it not also true that the State committee did not reserve as much acreage as the law permitted them to reserve?

Mr. PACE. It certainly did not. I think in that State they reserved three and a fraction percent of the State allotment when it was authorized to reserve 10 percent. But let me make it plain as a part of the legislative history of this bill that the Secretary of Agriculture should fix a date, October, November, or December, as he chooses, within which time the farmers must file applications for new farm allotments. When those are closed they should be consolidated by the county committees; they should be referred to the State committee, and not until then should the State committee make an allocation to the counties for new farm allotments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has again expired.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Georgia five additional minutes.

Mr. PACE. Let me say also that, of course, the county committee should not distribute any of its reserve to any new farms until all the applications have been filed, as I have stated. I think that is important because it did contribute to the situation which we faced.

Let me say in conclusion that there are other provisions in the bill, some of which are minor. I shall not go into them, except to mention one. We have here tried again to take care of the situation in the far West. I think the committee did the best it could to take care of the problems of the far West with respect to long-staple cotton. The bill contains one provision that I regard as a most liberal provision for the producers of long-staple cotton. First, we assure them a support price on long-staple cotton. Let me say this to you—I am sorry if it takes time: The question arose as to whether or not under Public Law 272 support was provided for long-staple cotton. After long deliberation, the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture ruled that it did not authorize a support for long-staple cotton. The long-staple producers of Arizona and other States now have pending in the Federal courts a suit to compel the Secretary of Agriculture to support the price of long-staple cotton for the year 1950. The committee is not here attempting in any way to settle that lawsuit, and wants it understood that nothing that we do here has any intent or purpose of determining whether or not under the present law long-staple cotton was to be supported or was not to be supported; that question is an issue for the courts and should be determined by the courts. What we are doing here is at least to clarify the matter; we are at least making it certain that next year and the years to come the producers of long-staple cotton shall have the same support price on a comparable basis as the producers of short-staple cotton.

We also make it certain that the cottonseed from long-staple cotton shall also enjoy a comparable support price with the cottonseed from short-staple cotton.

We improve generally the machinery of the marketing quotas under Public Law 272 as to long-staple cotton, which was rather loose and indefinite. We assure the long-staple cotton producers a very generous minimum allotment for long-staple cotton.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Would the gentleman be in position to say what was intended in the other law?

Mr. PACE. I am sure the gentleman observed that I said it was not the intent, purpose, or desire of the committee to settle that lawsuit.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I understand; but I was asking the gentleman's opinion as to what was intended in the old law.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, let me say in conclusion—I shall not undertake to explain the details here—that the provisions of the bill as to long staple are most acceptable to the producers of long-staple cotton. I think they agree that the committee has been most generous to them. It has given them a minimum allotment which is very, very generous. It must be understood that up until this year, and for the last few years, there have been only a few thousand acres put into long-staple cotton. This year they have, I believe, about 110,000 acres in long-staple cotton.

We have tried to make a very generous provision for the producers of long-staple cotton in the West and in return it is the earnest hope of the committee that those who serve the long-staple areas will find it possible to support the bill in its entirety.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 342 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by striking the period at the end of the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and adding the following: "Provided, That the Secretary shall proclaim a national marketing quota for the 1951 cotton crop if he determines that the total supply of cotton for the marketing year 1950–51 will exceed the estimated domestic consumption plus exports for such marketing year, and shall proclaim a national marketing quota for the 1952 cotton crop if he determines that the total supply of cotton for the marketing year 1951–52 will exceed the estimated domestic consumption plus exports for such marketing year."

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ROONEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9109) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended; the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act; Public Law 74, Seventy-seventh Congress; the Agricultural Act of 1949; and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. McDaniel, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 1603) entitled "For the relief of Walter P. Gardner, sole surviving trustee of the property of the Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey" now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, is hereby referred to the Court of Claims; and the court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of sections 1492 and 2509 of title 28 of the United States Code and report to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, giving such findings of fact and conclusions thereon as shall be sufficient to inform the Congress of the nature and character of the demand as a claim, legal or equitable, against the United States and the amount, if any, legally or equitably due from the United States to the claimant.

SPEAKER AUTHORIZED TO SIGN ENROLLED BILLS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the adjournment of the House until Monday next the Clerk is authorized to receive messages from the Senate and that the Speaker be authorized to sign any enrolled bills and joint resolutions duly passed by the two Houses and found duly enrolled.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

DISTINGUISHED MEMBERS OF THE JAPANESE DIET

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order on Monday next for the Speaker to declare a recess at any time, subject to the call of the Chair, to receive distinguished members of the Japanese Diet on the floor and greet other distinguished visitors from Japan in the gallery.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PRIME MINISTER OF AUSTRALIA

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next it may be in order for the Speaker to declare a recess at any time, subject to the call of the Chair, for the purpose of meeting and receiving the Prime Minister of Australia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT TO THE HATCH ACT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9023) to amend the Hatch Act.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Massachusetts explain this bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, this bill is substantially the same as a bill that passed the House a year ago last February and gives the Civil Service Commission discretion in connection with punishment that might be meted out in certain cases where there is only a technical violation of the law. Instead of a complete separation from service any agency will have the discretion in connection with the punishment it might give. This bill passed the House in practically the same form last year, although the present bill contains a few amendments which make it better than the bill was last year when it passed the House by unanimous consent.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is all it does?

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman does not know whether the Senate will tack on a new and much larger bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is unpredictable.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 (b) of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939, is amended to read as follows:

"(b) If in the case of any person violating the provisions of this section it is found by the United States Civil Service Commission that such violation warrants removal he shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person. If the Commission finds that the violation does not warrant removal, a lesser penalty shall be imposed by direction of the Commission. The Commission is authorized and directed to reopen and reconsider all cases heretofore determined under this act in which a penalty of removal from office or position has been imposed and in lieu of such penalty of removal to impose a penalty within the limits hereinbefore authorized in this section if in the judgment of the Commission the violation would not have warranted removal if this amendment had been in force and effect at the time of such violation."

This act shall become effective upon passage.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 4, strike out the words "and directed" and insert "in all cases, and directed in such cases as may be accompanied by written application" in lieu thereof.

Page 2, strike out line 14 and add a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. Section 9 of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'(c) At the end of each fiscal year the Commission shall report to the President for transmittal to the Congress the names, addresses, and nature of employment of all persons with respect to whom action has been taken by the Commission under the terms of this section, with a statement of the facts upon which action was taken, and the penalty imposed.'"

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday of next week be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

GREENVILLE DIVISION IN THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF MISSISSIPPI

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3098) to amend section 104 of title 28 of the United States Code so as to create a Greenville division in the northern district of Mississippi, with terms of court to be held at Greenville.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 104 of title 28 of the United States Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"§ 104. Mississippi

"Mississippi is divided into two judicial districts to be known as the northern and southern districts of Mississippi.

"(5) The Hattiesburg division comprises the counties of Covington, Forrest, Greene, Jefferson Davis, Jones, Lamar, Lawrence, Marion, Perry, and Walthall.

"Court for the Hattiesburg division shall be held at Hattiesburg."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The proceedings whereby a similar House bill (H. R. 7399) was passed were vacated, and the bill was laid upon the table.

REFEREES IN BANKRUPTCY

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3921) to provide for the temporary appointment of referees in bankruptcy, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 43 of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"d. Whenever the office of a referee is vacant the judge or the chief judge of the district may, with the approval of the Director as to the necessity therefor, appoint temporarily a referee who shall serve at such salary as may be fixed by the Director to serve until the conference shall have acted with reference to the vacancy as provided by section 43b. Whenever a referee is temporarily absent or unable because of illness or for other reasons to act, the judge or the chief judge of the district may, with the approval of the Director as to the necessity therefor, appoint temporarily a referee who shall serve at such salary and for such period of time as may be fixed by the Director. Any salary fixed pursuant to this subsection shall be subject to the limitations prescribed by section 40 of this act."

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the provisions of H. R. 9171 as passed, as follows:

"That subdivision c of section 43 of an act entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States,' approved July 1, 1898, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'c. Whenever the office of a referee is vacant or its occupant is temporarily absent or disqualified to act, or whenever the expeditious transaction of the business of the court or courts of bankruptcy may require, the judge, or any one of the judges, may act; or the judge or the chief judge of the district may designate and assign temporarily any referee of the district to act; or the chief judge of the circuit may designate and assign temporarily one or more referees within the circuit to act upon presentation of a certificate of necessity by the judge or chief judge of the district wherein the need arises, or the chief judge of the circuit may order that pending cases be rereferred and future cases referred to one or more referees within the circuit; or the Chief Justice of the United States may designate and assign temporarily a referee from another circuit to act upon presentation of a certificate of necessity by the chief judge of the circuit wherein the need arises. No designation and assignment shall be made without the consent of the chief judge or judicial council of the circuit from which a referee is to be designated and assigned. All designations and assignments of referees shall be filed with the clerks and entered on the minutes of the courts from and to which made. The Chief Justice of the United States or a chief judge of a circuit or a judge or chief judge of a district may make new designations and assignments in accordance with the provisions of this subsection, and may revoke those previously made by him.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the temporary assignment of referees in bankruptcy, and for other purposes."

The proceedings whereby a similar House bill (H. R. 9171) was passed were vacated, and the bill was laid on the table.

ESTABLISHING BOUNDARY BETWEEN THE STATE OF MISSOURI AND THE STATE OF KANSAS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (S. 147) giving the consent of Congress to an agreement between the State of Missouri and the State of Kansas establishing a boundary between such States.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas the General Assembly of the State of Missouri passed an act known and designated as senate bill No. 141, bearing the signature of James T. Blair, Jr., president of the senate; Ray Hamlin, speaker of the house of representatives; and the signature and approval of Forrest Smith, Governor of Missouri, under date of December 19, 1949; and

Whereas the Legislature of the State of Kansas passed a similar act known and designated as house bill No. 25, bearing the signatures of Dale M. Bryant, speaker of the house of representatives; Frank L. Hagaman, president of the senate; and the signature and approval of Frank Carlson, Governor of Kansas, under date of February 22, 1949; and

Whereas the said acts provided in substance that upon the ratification of said acts by the Congress of the United States, the center of the channel of the Missouri River, as its flow extends from its intersection with the fortieth parallel, north latitude, southward to the middle of the mouth of the Kansas or Kaw River, shall be that portion of the true and permanent boundary line between the States of Missouri and Kansas, subject only to changes which may occur by the natural processes of accretion and reliction, but not by avulsion; and

Whereas the said acts of the States of Missouri and Kansas constitute an agreement between said States establishing a boundary line between said States: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the consent of the Congress is hereby given to such agreement and to the establishment of such boundary, and said acts of the States of Missouri and Kansas are hereby approved.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The proceedings whereby a similar House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 402) was passed were vacated and the joint resolution was laid on the table.

The lands transferred pursuant to the provisions of this act shall be constituted a part of the Barrancas National Cemetery.

SEC. 3. That the conditions and the proviso contained in section 1 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act providing for the taking over by the United States Government of the Confederate Cemetery at Springfield, Mo.," which affect the use to which the land comprising the Confederate Cemetery at Springfield, Mo., can be placed, be, and the same hereby are, made inapplicable to that portion of said Confederate Cemetery located outside of the walled enclosure which presently contains the graves of men who were in the military and naval service of the Confederate States of America: Provided, That said land located outside of the walled enclosure shall be utilized as a part of the Springfield National Cemetery.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Army is authorized to transfer to the State of Kentucky, or to a county or municipality thereof, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the tract of land acquired for the establishment of the Perryville National Cemetery, under authority of the act of Congress entitled "An act to erect a tablet or marker in the memory of the Federal soldiers who were killed at the Battle of Perryville, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1928, without cost to said State, county, or municipality: Provided, That should the State of Kentucky or any political subdivision thereof fail to indicate its desire to acquire the property within 90 days after the enactment of this measure, then the property shall be disposed of in accordance with existing law after removal of the monument therefrom. The Secretary of the Army is further authorized and directed to remove the monument which was constructed in the Perryville National Cemetery under authority of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1928, from its present location and to reerect it in the Camp Nelson National Cemetery, Nicholasville, Ky.

SEC. 5. There are hereby authorized to be aprpopriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the provisions of H. R. 6807 as passed, as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Army is authorized and directed—

"a. to expand existing facilities at the Rock Island National Cemetery, Rock Island, Ill., by utilizing not to exceed 30 acres of federally owned lands under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Army adjoining the present national cemetery facility, which are surplus to military needs, and to provide for the care and maintenance thereof under the same regulations as prescribed for other national cemeteries under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Army; and

"b. to expand existing facilities at the Fort Leavenworth National Cemetery, Fort Leavenworth, Kans., by utilizing not to exceed 8 acres of federally owned land under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Army, adjoining the present national cemetery facility, which are surplus to military needs, and to provide for the care and maintenance thereof under the same regulations as prescribed for other national cemeteries under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Army.

"SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to transfer, without compensation therefor, to the Secretary of the Army for cemeterial purposes such Government-owned land under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Navy, located adjacent to the Barrancas National Cemetery near the city of Pensacola, Fla., as may be determined by the Secretary of the Navy to be available for the expansion of said cemetery. The lands transferred pursuant to the provisions of this act shall be constituted a part of the Barrancas National Cemetery."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The proceedings whereby a similar House bill (H. R. 6807) was passed were vacated, and the bill was laid on the table.

BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING, TREASURY DEPARTMENT

Mr. KARSTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3653) to provide for financing the operations of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Treasury Department, and for other purposes. I may say that this is identical to a House bill that was passed earlier today, H. R. 8662.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any work or services are requisitioned from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Treasury Department (hereinafter referred to as the "Bureau"), the requisitioning agency shall make payment therefor from funds available to it for such purposes at prices deemed by the Secretary of the Treasury (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") to be adequate to recover the amount of direct and indirect costs of the Bureau, including its administrative expenses, incidental to performing the work or services requisitioned. Requisitioning agencies shall make payment to the Bureau promptly on the basis of bills rendered by the Bureau.

SEC. 2. (a) There is hereby established, as of July 1, 1951, a Bureau of Engraving and Printing Fund (hereinafter referred to as the "fund"). The fund shall be capitalized on the basis of—

(1) an initial appropriation by the Congress to the fund of not to exceed $5,000,000 and such additional amounts as from time to time may be appropriated for the purposes of the fund, which sums are hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated;

(2) all of the receivables and the inventories and other physical assets of the Bureau as of the close of business June 30, 1951, exclusive of buildings occupied, land, and the unexpended balances of appropriations made to the Bureau, such inventories and other physical assets to be capitalized at fair and reasonable values to be determined by the Secretary; and

(3) assumption by the fund of all of the liabilities of the Bureau as of the close of business on June 30, 1951.

(b) The fund shall assume all of the obligations and other commitments of the Bureau outstanding as of the close of business on June 30, 1951.

(c) The fund shall include all property and other physical assets acquired by the Bureau except buildings and land, all amounts recoverable as provided in section 1 for the costs of work and services performed by the Bureau, and all other amounts receivable by the Bureau from whatever sources derived, including all proceeds arising from disposition of any property or other assets acquired by the fund.

(d) The fund shall be available without fiscal-year limitation for financing all costs and expenses of operating and maintaining the Bureau subsequent to June 30, 1951.

(e) Any surplus accruing to the fund in any fiscal year shall be paid into the general fund of the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts during the ensuing fiscal year: Provided, That any such surplus may be applied first to restore any impairment of the capital of the fund by reason of variations between the prices charged for work or services and the amount determined to be the actual cost of performing such work or services.

(f) A special deposit account for the fund shall be established with the Treasurer of the United States. The special deposit account shall be credited with the sums made available by appropriations authorized in this act and with all receipts of the Bureau without the covering of such receipts into the Treasury. The balance in the special deposit account shall be available for making disbursements authorized on behalf of the fund in accordance with the act of December 29, 1941 (55 Stat. 875), as amended, through the disbursing facilities of the Treasury Department.

SEC. 3. The unexpended balances of all appropriations made to the Bureau for the fiscal years 1950 and 1951 shall lapse on June 30, 1951, and shall be transferred immediately to the surplus fund of the Treasury.

SEC. 4. The Secretary shall prepare and submit an annual business-type budget program for the Bureau.

SEC. 5. There shall be installed and maintained in the Bureau an integrated system of accounting, including proper features of internal control, which will (a) assure adequate control over all assets and liabilities of the fund; (b) develop accurate direct and indirect costs of production of the Bureau for making recoveries of such costs on the basis of work requisitioned; (c) make provision for replacement of capitalized equipment and other fixed assets through the maintenance of adequate depreciation reserves based on original cost or on appraised values as authorized in section 2 (a) (2); (d) afford full disclosure with respect to the financial condition and operations of the fund according to the accrual method of accounting; and (e) supply on the basis of accounting results the data for the annual budget of the Bureau with respect to the last completed fiscal year. The system of accounting shall conform to principles and standards prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States to accomplish the purposes of this section, and shall be subject to such review by the Comptroller General as may be necessary to assure its conformance with the principles and standards prescribed and its effectiveness in operation.

SEC. 6. The financial transactions, accounts, and reports of the fund shall be audited on an annual basis by the General Accounting Office and a copy of each report on audit shall be furnished promptly to the President, the Congress, and the Secretary.

SEC. 7. Any power or authority conferred upon the Secretary by this act may be delegated by him to any officer or employee of the Treasury Department.

SEC. 8. (a) Section 1 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes", approved June 4, 1897, is amended by striking out the first proviso contained in the third paragraph under the caption "Engraving and Printing" (30 Stat. 18; 31 U. S. C. 178).

(b) Section 1 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes", approved August 4, 1886, is amended by striking out the proviso contained in the third paragraph under the caption "Engraving and Printing" (24 Stat. 227; 31 U. S. C. 176).

(c) In the case of all other laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act, the provisions of this act shall govern.

(d) This act shall take effect on July 1, 1951.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The proceedings by which a similar House bill (H. R. 8662) was passed were vacated, and the bill was laid on the table.

SETTLEMENT OF ACCOUNTS OF CERTAIN DECEASED OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. KARSTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3652) to facilitate the settlement of the accounts of certain deceased civilian officers and employees of the Government.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate the settlement of the accounts of deceased civilian officers and employees of the Federal Government and of the government of the District of Columbia (including wholly owned and mixed-ownership Government corporations) all unpaid compensation due such an officer or employee at the time of his death shall be paid to the person or persons surviving at the date of death, in the following order of precedence, and such payment shall be a bar to recovery by any other person of amounts so paid:

First, to the beneficiary or beneficiaries designated by the officer or employee in writing to receive such compensation filed with the Government agency in which the officer or employee was employed at the time of his death, and received by such agency prior to the officer's or employee's death;

Second, if there be no such beneficiary, to the widow or widower of such officer, or employee;

Third, if there be no beneficiary or surviving spouse, to the child or children of such officer or employee, and descendants of deceased children, by representation;

Fourth, if none of the above, to the parents of such officer or employee, or the survivor of them;

Fifth, if there be none of the above, to the duly appointed legal representative of the estate of the deceased officer or employee, or if there be none, to the person or persons determined to be entitled thereto under the laws of the domicile of the deceased officer or employee.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this act the term "unpaid compensation" means the pay, salary, or allowances, or other compensation due on account of the services of the decedent for the Federal Government or the government of the District of Columbia. It shall include, but not be limited to, (1) all per diem in lieu of subsistence, mileage, and amounts due in reimbursement of travel expenses, including incidental and miscellaneous expenses in connection therewith for which reimbursement is due; (2) all allowances upon change of official station; (3) all quarters and cost-of-living allowances and overtime or premium pay; (4) amounts due for payment of cash awards for employees' suggestions; (5) amounts due as refund of salary deductions for United States savings bonds; (6) payment for all accumulated and current accrued annual or vacation leave equal to the compensation the decedent would have received had he remained in service until the expiration of the period of such annual or vacation leave; (7) the amounts of all checks drawn in payment of such compensation which were not delivered by the Government to the officer or employee during his lifetime or of any unnegotiated checks returned to the Government because of the death of the officer or employee.

SEC. 3. (a) Subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States, the employing agency shall cause the unpaid compensation to be paid to the beneficiaries, if any, designated by the officer or employee under section 1 of this act, or, if none, to the widow or widower of such officer or employee.

(b) Accounts not payable under section 3 (a) (with the exception of accounts of employees of the District of Columbia which shall be paid by the District of Columbia, and accounts of employees of wholly owned and mixed-ownership Government corporations which may be paid by such corporations) shall be payable on settlement of the General Accounting Office, except as the Comptroller General may by regulation otherwise authorize or direct.

SEC. 4. This act shall not apply to any benefits, refunds, or interest payable under the Retirement Act applicable to the decedent's service or to amounts the disposition of which is otherwise expressly prescribed by Federal law.

SEC. 5. Officers and employees affected shall be notified by the employing agency of the provisions of this act relative to the disposition of such compensation in the event no beneficiary is designated by them, and of their right to designate a beneficiary or beneficiaries in accordance with its terms if they desire a different disposition to be made thereof. Designations so made may be changed or revoked at any time under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Comptroller General.

SEC. 6. This act shall be effective 120 days from the date of its enactment as of which time section 2 of the act of December 21, 1944 (58 Stat. 845), is repealed.

SEC. 7. This act shall not apply to the accounts of officers and employees of the Panama Canal and the Panama Railroad on the Isthmus of Panama, or to the accounts of officers and employees of the Federal land banks, Federal intermediate credit banks, production credit corporations, or the regional banks for cooperatives.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The proceedings by which a similar House bill (H. R. 8621) was passed were vacated, and the bill was laid on the table.

DR. IN SUNG KWAK

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2253) for the relief of Dr. In Sung Kwak. A similar House bill (H. R. 6760) passed the House earlier today.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws, Dr. In Sung Kwak, or Norton, Kans., shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of his last entry into the United States, upon payment of the required visa fee and head tax. Upon enactment of this act the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The proceedings by which a similar House bill (H. R. 6760) was passed were vacated, and the bill was laid on the table.

DODGE COUNTY, WIS.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3585) for the relief of Dodge County, Wis. A similar House bill, H. R. 8394, passed the House earlier today.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to pay, out of funds appropriated for the Fish and Wildlife Service, to the Wisconsin State Highway Commission for credit to the Dodge County allotment for State trunk highway improvement, the sum of $37,638, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for compensation for the abandonment of that portion of the Marsh Road, known as STH No. 49, within the boundary limits of the Horicon National Wildlife Refuge: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The proceedings by which a similar House bill (H. R. 8394) was passed were vacated, and the bill was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries have until midnight Saturday to file a report on the bill H. R. 6061.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is a minority report to be filed on that bill?

Mr. HART. None has been indicated.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I suggest that as a precaution the gentleman modify his request to provide that the same time be allowed in which to file minority views.

Mr. HART. That is perfectly agreeable to me, Mr. Speaker, and I include that in my request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey, as modified?

There was no objection.

LACK OF AIR SERVICE FROM CHICAGO, ILL., TO SIOUX CITY, IOWA

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, on December 19, 1946, the Civil Aeronautics Board issued a certificate to Parks Airlines of St. Louis, to inaugurate airline service from Chicago, Ill., to Sioux City, Iowa, and serving such intermediate points as Rockford, Ill., Dubuque, Waterloo, and Fort Dodge, Iowa.

Splendid airport facilities, costing local taxpayers and the Federal Government several millions of dollars, have long since been completed at most of these points yet not a single plane has operated to provide passenger and air-mail service in the nearly 4 years since the certificate of operation was granted and which has never been revoked.

Mr. Speaker, unless immediate action is taken to provide regularly scheduled air service to this area I shall insist upon a thorough investigation of the Civil Aeronautics Board and the reasons for this unwarranted and costly delay.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] is recognized for 15 minutes.

PROGRESS REPORT ON REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE BRANCH OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, toward the end of the first session of the Eighty-first Congress I made some remarks on the subject of reorganization of the executive branch of the Government. I called attention to the substantial progress that had been made in carrying out the recommendations of the Hoover Commission. I also pointed out that much remained to be done.

Continued widespread and deep interest in this subject, in Iowa and throughout the country, leads me to attempt again to strike a balance sheet of accomplishments as of today and steps remaining to be taken.

Mr. Speaker, the following is a summary of my remarks on the reorganization of the executive branch of the Government:

First. What was done in the first session of the Eighty-first Congress.

Second. Developments during the second session of the Eighty-first Congress.

Third. Summary of remaining work to be done.

I

First, let me summarize briefly the more significant reorganization achievements of the first session.

The most important action was the passage of the Reorganization Act of 1949 (Public Law 109), under which the President was authorized to transmit reorganization plans to the Congress. Under the terms of this law, a reorganization plan goes into effect in 60 days unless a majority of the total membership in either House of the Congress disapproves.

During the first session the President transmitted eight reorganization plans, six of which went into effect and one of which was superseded by legislation; one, the plan to create a Department of Welfare, was rejected by the Senate. The reorganization effected by these plans included (1) the transfer of the Bureau of Employment Security from the Federal Security Agency to the Department of Labor; (2) the transfer of the Public Roads Administration from the Federal Works Agency to the Department of Commerce; (3) the transfer of the National Security Resources Board and the National Security Council to the Executive Office of the President; (4) and improvements in the internal organization of the Post Office Department, the Civil Service Commission, and the Maritime Commission.

Public Law 152 created the General Services Administration, upon which were conferred important powers with respect to the purchase, utilization, storage, and disposal of property, the keeping of official records, the management of Federal buildings and other housekeeping services.

Public Law 73 strengthened the top management of the Department of State. This Department, under the broad reorganization authority vested in the Secretary, was substantially reorganized by administrative action during the session.

Public Law 36 and Public Law 216, supplementing the National Security Act of 1947, pushed forward, along lines recommended by the Hoover Commission, the unification of the armed services.

During the first session the Congress also enacted important legislation with respect to the pay and reclassification of Federal employees.

All in all, it has been estimated that nearly 25 percent of the Commission's recommendations were acted upon, by legislation, reorganization plan, or administrative action, during the first session of the Eighty-first Congress.

II

The outstanding development in executive reorganization during the present session has been the transmittal of 27

reorganization plans to the Congress by the President. Nineteen of these are already in effect and one more will go into effect July 31.

Six were rejected by the Senate and one by the House of Representatives. The plan rejected by the House—plan No. 27—would have created a Department of Welfare. A similar plan was rejected last year by the Senate. It is worthy of note that of the 35 reorganization plans submitted by the President since the Reorganization Act was passed only this one plan has been rejected by the House.

About one-half of this year's reorganization plans are concerned with improvements in the general management of the departments and other agencies.

It will be recalled that the first report of the Hoover Commission is fundamental to all the other reports and recommendations. This report dealt with the general management of the executive branch. It called attention to the absence of clear lines of command and responsibility and to the consequences of the violation of this basic principle of good administration. It stressed the necessity of concentrating authority and responsibility for administration in the President and heads of departments and agencies and of giving these top executive officials adequate staff to assist them in the exercise of this authority.

Many of the plans that have been submitted this year are designed to carry out recommendations made in this first report. Plans Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 transferred to the heads of the departments of the Treasury, Justice, the Interior, Agriculture, Commerce, and Labor, respectively, authority placed by law in subordinate officials and provided additional top level staff to assist them in carrying out this authority. Plans Nos. 1 and 2, dealing with the Department of the Treasury and the Department of Agriculture, were rejected by the Senate. Plan No. 25 transferred the functions of the National Security Resources Board to the chairman of the Board.

In the case of plan 2, referring to the Department of the Treasury, objection was made to transferring to the Secretary authority placed by law in the Comptroller of the Currency. Following rejection of this plan, the President transmitted to the Congress plan No. 26, which is similar to plan No. 1 except that it exempts from its operation powers conferred by law on the Comptroller of the Currency. This plan No. 26 went into effect July 31, 1950.

Several plans are designed to improve the general management of the so-called independent regulatory commissions.

Plans Nos. 7, 8, 9, and 10, dealing respectively with the Interstate Commerce Commission (7), the Federal Trade Commission (8), the Federal Power Commission (9), and the Securities and Exchange Commission (10), authorized the President to designate the chairmen of these commissions and transferred to the chairmen responsibility for day-to-day administration.

Plan Nos. 11, 12, and 13, dealing with the Federal Communications Commission (11), the National Labor Relations Board (12), and the Civil Aeronautics Board (13), transferred to the chairmen of these agencies responsibility for day-to-day administration. Plan No. 12 also transferred to the Chairman of the National Labor Relations Board certain duties assigned by law to the General Counsel. It should be noted that in the case of the three last-named agencies the President was already authorized to designate the chairmen.

The Senate rejected plan No. 7, dealing with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and plans Nos. 11 and 12, dealing with the Federal Communications Commission and the National Labor Relations Board. The other plans 8, 9, 10, and 13 are now in effect.

An important distinction was recognized in these reorganization plans between the regular departments and the independent commissions and boards. In the case of the departments all authority placed by law in subordinate officials, with specified exceptions, was transferred to the Secretary. In the case of the boards and commissions, only responsibility for day-to-day administration was transferred to the chairmen. Responsibility for administering the substantive functions of these agencies remains in the board or commission as a whole.

Another group of plans, all of which are now in effect, are designed to strengthen the General Services Administration established last year by Public Law 52, Eighty-first Congress.

Plan No. 15 transferred from the General Services Administration to the Department of the Interior responsibility for public works projects in Alaska and the Virgin Islands.

Plan No. 16 transferred from the General Services Administration to the Federal Security Agency certain functions concerning school assistance and water-pollution control.

Plan No. 17 transferred from the General Services Administration to the Housing and Home Finance Agency responsibility for the advance planning of non-Federal public works and the war public works program. The purpose of these plans was to rid the General Services Administration of functions which are not strictly related to its major purpose, that of serving as a central housekeeping agency.

Plans Nos. 18 and 20 transferred to the General Services Administration important functions with respect to building and space management and maintenance outside the District of Columbia, and certain State Department duties with regard to archives and records.

Plans Nos. 22 and 23 provided for a further concentration of housing functions in the Housing and Home Finance Agency by transferring to it the Federal National Housing Association and the lending authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation with respect to the production and distribution of prefabricated houses and components. Plan No. 17, as indicated above, also brought under the Housing Agency responsibility for the advance planning of non-Federal public works, and the War Public Works program.

The Department of Labor was further strengthened by plan No. 19, which transferred to it the Bureau of Employees' Compensation and the Employees' Compensation Appeals Board, formerly in the Federal Security Agency, and by plan No. 14, which empowered the Secretary of Labor to coordinate the administration of labor standards under various statutes relating to Federal or federally-financed construction and public works.

Plan No. 21 marks another important step in the concentration of responsibility for Federal transportation functions in the Department of Commerce. It will be recalled that by plan No. 7 of 1949 the Public Roads Administration was transferred to the Department of Commerce; now plan No. 21 of 1950 transfers to that department the functions of the United States Maritime Commission. The plan abolishes the Maritime Commission. Some of its functions are transferred to a newly created Federal Maritime Board, in the Department of Commerce. The remaining functions are transferred to the Secretary of Commerce, to be administered through a newly established Maritime Administration.

Plan No. 24 transferring the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the Department of Commerce, was rejected by the Senate.

The attention of the Congress during this session has been directed largely to the important task of giving careful consideration to the reorganization plans transmitted by the President. It has, in addition, enacted some reorganization legislation, notably Public Law 507, establishing the National Science Foundation, recommended by the Hoover Commission, and Public Law 478, designed to facilitate and simplify the work of the Forest Service. Considerable attention has also been given by committees of the Congress to legislation concerning the reorganization of the Post Office Department and the revision of postal rates, the revision of personnel policies, changes in budgeting and accounting methods, records management, and other matters.

A substantial number of the recommendations of the Hoover Commission, perhaps 25 percent, can be put into effect by administrative action alone, requiring neither reorganization plan nor legislation. A recent check-up by a subcommittee of the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments indicates that most of the agencies and departments are giving serious thought to the recommendations of the Commission and that they have already put into effect a large number of these recommendations. The Bureau of the Budget and the agencies are cooperating in a management improvement program.

This program has been greatly assisted by the appropriation in the Supplemental Appropriation Act for 1950,

Public Law 358, of $1,000,000 for the President's special management-improvement fund. The President has established an Advisory Committee on Management Improvement consisting of 12 top executives from industry and Government. The purpose of this committee is to assist the President in creating a Government-wide program for management improvement, in developing a framework for the conduct of management activities, and in reviewing the progress of agency management improvement efforts.

Significant changes in personnel policies have been made by administrative action. The Civil Service Commission and several departments and agencies have already put into effect a number of the Commission's recommendations and have under consideration many others.

Under authority conferred upon it by law the General Services Administration has made real progress in coordinating Federal housekeeping functions. The State Department, the Defense Department, and the Post Office Department, among other agencies, have instituted important internal reorganizations in line with the Commission's recommendations.

There has been a considerable advance in performance budgeting, recommended by the Commission. Several agencies presented their 1951 estimates on a performance basis. But there is need of further progress in this respect.

Many improvements, too, have been brought about in accounting and reporting. The Bureau of the Budget, the Treasury Department, and the General Accounting Office, working together and with the departments and agencies, are gradually putting into effect a number of the Commission's recommendations.

III

The progress already made in the reorganization of the executive branch is commendable. It has been estimated that over 50 percent of the Hoover Commission's recommendations have now been put into effect.

Nevertheless, after almost 2 years much remains to be done. The problems of reorganizing public works' functions, land and water-resource functions, and lending and financing functions remain largely to be dealt with. Notwithstanding the substantial achievements in the fields of general management, personnel policies, the post office, and budgeting and accounting, reorganization in these areas is still a long way from achieving the objectives set forth by the Commission.

Many of these problems are continuing and the job in one sense will never be finished. At the same time, it is to be hoped that by the end of another year substantial progress will have been made in carrying out all of the major objectives of the Commission.

This does not mean that each and every one of the Commission's recommendations ought to be adopted in the precise form proposed. Careful study by the Executive and by the Congress may often suggest the desirability of modifying or in some cases even of rejecting, the Commission's recommendations. The essential thing is that there be no slackening of the effort to remedy the major defects in our administrative structure. The current international situation adds emphasis to our imperative need for maximum efficiency in administering the affairs of Government.

The continuing interest of the public generally in these reforms is most encouraging. It is important that a number of Nation-wide organizations are keeping abreast of changes that are being made in the executive branch of our National Government. Several States, including Iowa, have set up "little Hoover commissions" to examine and make recommendations for improvements in State governments.

All these activities emphasize the importance of the efforts made already and emphasize the necessity of bringing the work even nearer completion in the Eighty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DAVIS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

POSSIBLE ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, within the last few days I have heard rumors, as most of the Members of the House must have heard them also, that Congress may vote to adjourn on August 15.

We are in the midst of one of the worst situations our Nation has ever faced since it came into existence, and if any such movement to adjourn is on foot, I shall oppose it and vote against it.

We were not engaged in hostilities last year. We faced no necessity for priorities or allocations of critical materials last year. We faced no emergency which called for a sudden and unexpected increase in military expenditures amounting to one-fourth of the budget for the year, and faced no demand for a sudden tremendous increase in taxes. Last year we were holding our sessions in cramped quarters in the Ways and Means Committee room. This year we are back in our regular quarters in the House Chamber.

Nevertheless, last year, when the affairs of this country were in far better condition in nearly every respect than they are at the present moment, Congress did not adjourn until October 19.

It is incomprehensible to me that anyone should feel that Congress would be justified at this critical moment in the life of our Nation to vote to shut down the activities of both Houses of Congress, close their doors, and go home.

Go home to what? To see the question written upon the faces of everyone we meet upon the streets, even though they may not ask it with their lips, "What are you doing to win this war? What are you doing to prevent the Korean war from breaking out into world war III? What are you doing to protect us from Communists and fellow-travelers who are foot-loose and unhampered here in the United States?"

Any such plan of adjournment would carry with it the implication that Congress would transfer the obligations and responsibilities which properly belong to this body onto the shoulders of the President, by voting to him supreme authority over the civilian as well as the military—to unload all responsibility upon him, and escape our own, when we vote to adjourn and go home.

Have we come to the point where it is fitting for Members of Congress in effect to say: "I am of no value at the seat of Government in time of emergency. The proper course for me to take is to vote my powers into the Executive and go home."

Are we so little concerned with the gravity of the situation that we could be content to leave our post of duty and return home at a time like this?

Those American soldiers who died in battle on Korean soil, 7,000 miles from home, could not vote to adjourn and go home.

Those Americans, greatly outnumbered and fighting an enemy with far superior equipment, who had the misfortune to be taken prisoners, who had their hands tied behind them and were shot down by their barbarian conquerors, could not vote to adjourn and go home. Those Americans facing desperate odds who have fought a retreating fight all the way down and across Korea, to the point where they now face the threat of being pushed into the Pacific Ocean, cannot vote to adjourn and go home.

What will be their reaction when word gets to them that Congress has voted to adjourn and go home?

Within the next 12 months 295,000 of the members of the Army, Navy, and Air Force will reach the end of their terms of enlistment. Under their contract with the Government, solemnly entered into when they enlisted in the service, they are entitled to leave the Army, Navy, and Air Force and return to their homes when their terms expire. Yet on last Tuesday we, in this House, by our vote, took from them that right to leave the armed services and go home. By the action of this body, when concurred in by the Senate and the President, they will be required to serve 12 additional months and probably to face battle and even death itself. We, by our action, have made it impossible for these 295,000 to vote to adjourn and go home. What will they, and their fathers and mothers, and their wives and children, think if we vote to adjourn and go home, and the hundreds of thousands who will be drafted into service in the weeks and months to come?

There is plenty of legislative work for Congress to do if we stay. In this present crisis we are handicapped for lack of trained forces quickly available to go to the fighting front. If we had previously enacted a plan of universal military training and had coordinated that with a workable plan under which these trained men would be immediately available in time of emergency, we would be much better prepared than we now are to meet the grave situation immediately ahead of us. We can stay in session here and perfect and enact legislation to provide universal military training, and that is sorely needed.

There are now loose in this country a horde of Communists, variously estimated to number from 54,000 to 80,000 and a greater horde of fellow travelers, estimated to number more than half a million. We have no legislation on the books to confine these Communists where they will be unable to sabotage our industries, to wreck our public utilities, and to aid Russia in any other way. Nor do we have laws to enable us to properly supervise, control, or confine the fellow travelers, each of which for all practical purposes is nearly as great a menace as a member of the Communist Party itself. We sorely need legislation to take care of this situation, and we can devote our time and thought and efforts to that end also.

Mr. Speaker, Congress is the voice of the people. It is through the voices of the Members of the House and of the Senate that the people of America can be articulate. In this forum, their causes can be pleaded, their desires made known, and their rights upheld. To close the doors of Congress at a time like this is to stifle the voice of the people.

There is something else to consider in connection with this question. Some obligation rests upon us as Members of Congress to set an example of self-denial. The utmost in self-denial is now being practiced by our fighting men of the battlefronts. From one end of this country to the other in weeks and months and possibly years to come men, women, and children will be called upon to practice extremes in self-denial. Much of it will be the direct result of our actions here in passing legislation.

We have an obligation resting upon us to set a good example. Insofar as we are able to do so, it is our obligation to inspire patriotism in others. No battle was won when the patriots threw the tea into Boston Harbor, but their example was an inspiration to those who did fight the battles.

Patrick Henry, so far as I know, earned no great reputation as a warrior. However, his speech "Give me liberty or give me death" helped to inspire Washington and his soldiers at Valley Forge and Yorktown.

This crisis is not an occasion where the only responsibility is that of the soldiers and the President. This war has a front here in Washington. We are a part of the Government. We hope this war can be confined to Korea, but we all know there is a possibility that it may break out at any time on other fronts, Indochina, Iran, Greece, or elsewhere. In battle all soldiers must be alert, and in war all departments and officials of Government must be alert. How can we, as Members of Congress, say that we are alert, if at a time like this we close our doors and go home? How alert will we be at home, if a second front in this war breaks out in Indochina or Iran?

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, our duty to keep faith with the members of our armed services and with the people of America requires that we remain in session and stay constantly on the job here. I have taken this time today to state my position on this important matter, and I shall vote accordingly.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE ENEMY IS RUSSIA

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, since the Republic of Korea was attacked by the Red-led North Koreans on June 25th, a great many speeches have been made, in and out of the Congress, denouncing the act as one of naked aggression, and calling for an immediate strengthening of our own military forces to meet the threat presented by that breach of the peace. The United States, acting for the United Nations, thus acts for all peace-desiring people, in this first test of world unity.

Oddly enough, it is not fully evident from these speeches that we, in the Congress, have admitted to ourselves something known and recognized by housewives and merchants, by bootblacks and bankers, in fact by every thoughtful American in the land; that is, that the real aggressor, the well-spring, the source, the heart of all trouble in the world today leading to war, is Soviet Russia. Russia—the Kremlin—is the center of the cancer which is spreading through the troubled lands on the Asiatic continent and in the islands of the Far East. Until this fact is recognized officially, the United States and her United Nations allies are powerless to do other than waste military strength in action in Korea, or wherever else the Communist cancer erupts in action in Korea, or wherever else the Communist cancer erupts on the perimeter of Russia's sphere of absolute influence. This is what Russia desires and plans.

Let us explore the present situation. By a successful combination of psychological warfare, pressure politics, and the actual use of arms, Russia has, since 1945, brought almost a billion people under the hammer and sickle. The whole of China now belongs to Russia. Eastern Europe, much of Germany, most of the Balkans, are Russian-enslaved areas. Russia itself is thus surrounded on all her vulnerable borders by buffer states, where puppet armies are maintained.

Apparently Russia can create one incident after another, at will, to occupy our military attention. She can play her 10,000,000 puppet troops off against us, sapping our strength and substance in small but bloody wars, each at the end of a world-girdling supply line. While we waste our strength, she is building her own, including the atomic weapons she was not supposed to be able to make for a few more years.

It is also apparent that Russia will do everything in her power to involve the United States in actual conflict against the Chinese Communists. This is our greatest danger, and Russia's principal objective. Our protection was to help the legal government of China control the Red invaders, and through folly, or Communist sympathy in our State Department, we threw away that protection. Let there be no mistake as to the Russian intention; she wants all of Europe, the Near East, and Scandinavia.

The appraisal of the situation is frightening when we, as Representatives in the Congress, seriously analyze its meaning in terms of human and material cost. The appraisal is even more frightening when we realize that we have, if you and I and the average citizen can be identified as being a part of certain areas of this Government, aided and encouraged the Russian Communists in their bloody and their bloodless aggression. We as citizens and voters are responsible for the administration in power in this country at any given time. The administration is responsible for the policies of the administrative arm of the Government, which includes the State Department.

I do not need to review in detail the black events of these aggressions. They have been cited over and over again. One or two examples will serve to drive home the point. In 1945 we handed Russia the prize of the Orient, Manchuria, in exchange for 1 week of needless military maneuvering against the already beaten Japanese. In 1949 and 1950 certain areas of our Government still failed to recognize the seriousness of the Russian Communist threat by allowing the administration to treat internal security matters as political matters. In 1949 and 1950 we still tolerate a practice by some of our "friends" in the community of non-Communist nations—the practice of grabbing our ECA aid with one hand and with the other hand trading in war materials to Russia or her satellites.

In January—in fact, on January 24—Senator MALONE, of Nevada, introduced into the RECORD a list of 95 trade agreements between Marshall-plan nations and the so-called iron-curtain countries. Under these agreements, some of them highly secret, such materials as locomotives, Diesel engines, electrical equipment, heavy farm machinery, ball bearings, chemicals, machine tools, and the like, were shipped into the Communist arsenal, where they undoubtedly are being used to consolidate subjected territories or build the Soviet war machine for use against us. So far as I know, these agreements are still in force. On that same date Senate Joint Resolution 151 was introduced in the other body to stop any assistance on our part to any nation having trade agreements with, or assisting through trade, any Communist-controlled nation or area. That resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations of the other body. It is still there, Mr. Speaker, and that committee has not yet held a hearing on the resolution. Furthermore, despite ample evidence that the Communists are getting materials of war even now from nations receiving aid from us, there has been no apparent action to shut off our bounty, and thus, even at this late date, prevent any further strengthening of our enemy. The enemy is Russia.

Mr. Speaker, it is high time the United States officially recognizes the fact that the Soviet Union, and the Communist servants of that dictatorship, wherever they are, are enemies of the United States. Until that step is taken, and this Nation undertakes measures to deal effectively with the treasonable elements in our own midst—to make them as impotent as humanly possible, we will continue to suffer from these subrosa activities, internally or abroad. Until Russia is recognized as the root of the aggressive evil in this world, we and our allies of the United Nations, who are supporting the Security Council's decision to use force in Korea, can expect months and even years of inconclusive military waste, and the loss of American lives, on the perimeter of the real problem.

Mr. Speaker, there are steps which this Government can take beyond the present decision to increase our armed strength. Increasing the strength of the armed forces; voting $10,000,000,000 or more in money, or increasing the powers of a Government already leaning toward centralization, will not meet the issue, without these steps which I am about to suggest. It is necessary that we square up the issues and place ourselves in a better position to deal with the events now being forced upon us as surely as winter follows the autumn. These steps are:

First. We should announce officially to the world that the enemy is Russia. Recognizing this fact, we should at once take all measures necessary to meet that issue.

Second. We should present this issue seriously to the United Nations, and should use all the influence at our command to persuade the United Nations to recognize this issue, and to take the appropriate steps, all of which are outlined in the Charter of the United Nations, and which were anticipated when that charter was written and signed.

I quote briefly from Articles 39, 40, and 41. Article 39 says that—

> The Security Council shall determine the existence of any threat of the peace, breach of the peace, or act of aggression, and shall make recommendations, or determine what measures shall be taken * * * to maintain or restore international peace and security.

Article 40 says:

> In order to prevent an aggravation of the situation, the Security Council may, * * * call on the parties concerned to comply with such provisional measures as it deems necessary or desirable. * * * The Security Council shall duly take account of failure to comply with such provisional measures.

I particularly call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the next provision, in article 41:

> The Security Council may decide what measures not involving the use of armed force are to be employed to give effect to its decisions, and may call upon the members of the United Nations to apply such measures.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I particularly want to call your attention to the statement in article 41, of what these measures may be:

> These may include complete or partial interruption of economic relations and of rail, sea, air, postal, telegraphic, radio, and other means of communication, and the severance of diplomatic relations.

This, Mr. Speaker, I submit to you as the immediate and urgent requirement. The enemy is Russia. Russia should be as deliberately isolated, in the family of nations, as a member of any human family, suddenly discovered to have a highly contagious disease, would be isolated as an individual. Observe please, that when the charter of the United Nations was signed, it contemplated not merely united military action, but it contemplated "measures not involving the use of armed force"—and listed them as complete or partial interruption of economic relations, and specified "rail, sea, air, postal, telegraphic, radio, and other means of communication, and the severance of diplomatic relations."

Third. My third suggestion is, in effect, a duplication of my second suggestion. It is, however, an act against enemy aggression which the United States can put into effect, without waiting for action by the Security Council. The United States can insist that no nation, among the so-called Marshall-plan countries, shall use the money of the American taxpayers, directly or indirectly, to give military aid and comfort to the Soviet Union. It is sophistry to me, Mr. Speaker, to say that we are not paying for the aid sent the Soviet Union because the materials shipped are manufactured in a Marshall-plan country, if at the same time, we are contributing in money or goods to the sustaining economy of that country.

Americans brought back, in their bodies, some of the scrap we sold to Japan before Pearl Harbor. Some Americans did not come back, because of that scrap iron. Is not it thoughtless today to put ourselves in the position of facing, in the Far East, shells and explosives, made with American machine tools, and American chemicals shipped in the 84 ships which the Soviets were so generously "lent" during World War II—and which Russia now refuses to return—powered by American oil in American diesel engines, or of facing planes powered by jet engines from Great Britain?

Let me give you a few examples, Mr. Speaker. I have taken only a few items from a long list of material the Marshall-plan nations are reported to have shipped the Soviet Union, or the satellite countries.

In 1949, the United Kingdom shipped to the Soviet Union, or its satellites: Machine tools to the value of $5,138,000; machinery (including farm machinery) to the value of $45,172,400; electric generators to the value of $11,986,800; ball and roller bearings to the value of $243,600.

In 1949 France shipped to the Soviet Union and its satellites, and I mention only two items—machinery to the value of $10,272,238, and electrical equipment to the value of $2,015,239.

It is much more important, Mr. Speaker, to observe that in the current year, during the first 3 months, the United Kingdom shipped to Russia, among other items, electrical equipment to the value of $6,800,000, and machine tools to the value of $1,087,000.

Mr. Speaker, I wish also to include as an appendix to my statement a list which I have just received from the ECA of the exports of fuel, tractors, transportation equipment from ECA nations to the U. S. S. R. or the satellite countries. I particularly call your attention to the fact that we have shipped quantities of refined fuels, of track-laying tractors, and, above all, Mr. Speaker, we have shipped over $12,000,000 worth of transportation equipment in the last quarter of last year, and that we are still today shipping from some half-dozen Marshall-plan countries equipment which became materials of war to the nation which is presently our enemy. Our enemy, Mr. Speaker, is Russia.

Let me make here, Mr. Speaker, two very important observations. The first will surprise you. Upon inquiry, I learned that ECA, an agency of the United States Government, does not class machine tools as war material, and consequently has no objection to the shipment of machine tools to Russia or the satellites. Yet I call your attention to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that at the beginning of World War II, one of the greatest shortages in the United States and one of the greatest handicaps upon our own war effort, was the shortage of machine tools, and by a reverse process, it may be said today, that among the most important assets of a nation which has decided to disturb the peace of the world, will be the acquisition and ownership of modern machine tools.

Fourth. My next suggestion, Mr. Speaker, is a psychological suggestion. I think it is very important that quickly, and substantially, every nation which is signatory to the United Nations Charter, furnish both military and economic aid, to stop the Soviet Union in its present aggression. The enemy is Russia. I do not want the United States to be drawn into the position where we are fighting the North Koreans. This is, in truth, and in fact, a United Nations action, and to demonstrate it as a United Nations action for peace requires not only the economic sanctions I have recommended in my suggestion No. 1, but requires evidence to all the world that the nations who signed the United Nations Charter meant exactly what they said, and will unite, with force, if necessary, to stop aggression.

Fifth. I am a firm believer in the power of publicity. I think it is just as important to publicize to all the world and to the people of the Soviet Union itself, the backgrounds of the present conflict, the responsibility for the aggressive movement into Korea, the unity of all nations (except Russia and the satellites) to preserve the peace, and the effective force which is being gathered on the side of the free peoples. I think the world should know of the failure of Russia to keep previous agreements. A cursory examination fails to indicate to me a single treaty or agreement, signed by the Soviet Union, which that nation has ever kept. I have mentioned the failure to return the ships loaned Russia during World War II. The world should know of Russia's constant action, since World War II, to arm her satellites, as she has armed the North Koreans, not for peace, nor as simple agrarian movements, but to arm them for aggression. The world should publicize now its determined intention to stop aggression, just as we should publicize our determination to see that the result of this conflict shall be freedom for the peoples involved, and not slavery, whether it be Communist slavery or Empire slavery.

Sixth. Finally, Mr. Speaker, while this may be a simple statement, known to every American, I think we should make it clear that we are willing now, as in all times in the past or the future, to think of peace and to talk of peace, but that neither this Nation, nor any nation signatory to the United Nations Charter, will discuss peace upon any terms except those which are favorable to the nations who want freedom, and that we will, under no circumstances, discuss peace while a single advantage, gained by the present aggression in Korea, remains to the aggressor. The enemy is Russia.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JULY 28, 1950

(Legislative day of Thursday, July 20, 1950)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou God of all races and nations, who hast made of one blood all men to dwell upon the face of the earth, send out Thy light and Thy truth; let them lead us, let them bring us to Thy holy hill.

We are grateful for the mutual feeling of amity and good will that is in our hearts as we gladly extend the hand of fellowship to representatives of a great eastern nation, as today we declare friendship in this Chamber where once was declared war. Cleanse us, we beseech Thee, from secret faults which may mar our public service, knowing that we cannot call mankind to put aside the weapons of carnage and destruction if our own lives are arsenals of hatred, of prejudice, and of a selfish passion to rule. Make us vividly conscious of some freedoms which we may not exercise, the freedom to be self-indulgent; the freedom to satisfy our greed and leave others in need; the freedom to be soft, cynical, and selfish; the freedom to criticize others without accepting change in ourselves. May Thy kingdom of love and righteousness come within us that we may contribute worthily to mankind's abiding peace. We ask it in the Name that is above every name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. LUCAS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, July 27, 1950, was dispensed with.

Mr. Jack K. McFall, Assistant Secretary of State, and Mr. Horace Smith, Senate liaison officer, State Department; Mr. H. Kenaston Twitchell, Mr. Basil R. Entwistle, and Mr. Albert H. Ely.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair has previously announced, six members of the Japanese Diet and a large delegation of prominent citizens of Japan are now on a trip around the world to study economic, political, social, and other conditions in the various countries which they have visited and will visit, in order that they may take back to their own country any lessons they may learn from their associations and visits which may be of help to the Japanese people.

Until the recent World War II the relationship between the Japanese Government and the Government of the United States was most amicable and peaceful. Unfortunately that status was interrupted during World War II. We sincerely hope—and we trust it is likewise the hope of the Japanese people and the Japanese Government—that we may resume our peaceful relations with the Japanese people and the Japanese Government, and that the friendship and comity which existed for nearly a whole century may not only be resumed but may be the permanent status of association and cooperation between the Japanese Government and the Government of the United States, and the Japanese people and the people of the United States, to the end that there may be brought about friendly cooperation among all nations and a permanent peace that will be just and fair to all peoples and all nations.

It is in that spirit that we welcome to the Senate of the United States not only the members of the Japanese Diet but also their colleagues on this mission around the world of investigation and study. We hope that what they observe and learn among our people and throughout the world may strengthen their desire for peace and strengthen their hand in bringing about prosperity and rehabilitation among the Japanese people and a firmer cooperation and association between them and their Government and our people and our Government, and all peoples and all governments, in behalf of peace, justice, happiness, and contentment among the peoples of the world.

In that spirit as President of the Senate the Chair is happy to welcome the distinguished guests into our Chamber. [Applause.]

The Chair recognizes the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, it is a great privilege for me to introduce to my colleagues in the Senate the distinguished representatives of the Japanese Government and those who are traveling with them. It was my privilege last fall to visit the Far East and to make a study of the Japanese situation there on the ground, as well as the situation in other countries.

This group with us today is made up of some fifty or more leaders of Japanese thought and Japanese action. In addition to these eminent members of the Japanese Diet, the group includes the mayors of a number of cities in Japan, the governors of a number of prefectures in Japan, and some leaders of industry and some labor-union leaders.

I note especially that in this group are the mayors and the governors of the prefectures of Hiroshima and Nagasaki and members of the councils of those cities. That is an evidence of good will on the part of Japan toward the United States, and it lays the foundation of the friendship which we all believe must be established from now on, as the Vice President has so aptly said, between our country and Japan.

Beyond that, Mr. President, it seems to me that Japan today, with its new approach to world conditions, its new attempt to find out what is going on in the world, and the place it has in the world very significantly symbolizes what I found when I was in the Far East, namely, a yearning for freedom and a yearning for peace. War is not wanted, but roads to peace are what the people seek.

The people of the Far East desire to express their individuality, they wish to express the ability of the people to take care of themselves, the idea of having people free, not under the control of a dictatorship, not under the control of colonialism or imperialism, but imbued with a spirit of freedom. Here we have a group representing those ideals and entertaining the earnest desire to explore what is going on in the world.

The first stop of this group in their trip from Tokyo was in Switzerland, where they attended the Moral Rearmament Assembly at Caux and got a picture of the spiritual foundations of and the spiritual approach to world peace.

They went from there to Germany, where they studied conditions in Germany itself, a country in many ways comparable with their own, which had been at war with us, and where the people also are trying to find peace.

They went from Germany to France and England, and then came to the United States. They visited the United Nations, where Ambassador Austin received them at Lake Success. The Secretary General of the United Nations, Mr. Trygve Lie, also received them, and they had an opportunity to see the United Nations at work.

It is very fitting, therefore, that we should open our hearts in welcome to them, as they come here to discover in what way the world can be reorganized and established in the ways of permanent peace.

Mr. President, I am very happy indeed to be able on this occasion to say this word of welcome to these distinguished guests. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I cordially associate myself with the sentiments expressed by the Vice President and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. We are very happy to have with us the distinguished members of the Japanese Diet, and the prominent citizens and representatives of industry, labor, education, and other activities of Japan.

It will be recalled that about 100 years ago the United States was instrumental in aiding the people of Japan to form contacts with the outside world. That was the beginning of her great advance and career as a powerful and industrial nation playing an important part in the economy not only of the East but of the world.

It is true that we have recently been involved in a bitter and terrible war. I pray God that the people of Japan, like the people of America, will want peace and will strive for it; that they will want to do away with the rule of the materialists and of military masters, and will desire to set up and maintain governments devoted to democracy and to the rule of the people. I have great hope that Japan will heartily and in entire earnestness turn her attention toward democratic government, toward government controlled by the people, toward freedom and toward enlightened international cooperation, to the end that in the future wars may be prevented and the course of the nation may be charted along the roadway of peace, and thus contribute to the welfare and happiness of all the people of the world. It was that particular idea I wanted to leave with our distinguished visitors on this occasion.

We hope the people of Japan will realize that the United States in the last war had no ambitions for territory, no desire for conquest, no wish to conquer other peoples to bring them under the rule of the United States. We had no materialistic desires. We never dreamed of imperialism. We fought simply to defend the things for which we have stood since the United States was first established, for democracy, for peace, for all the fine attributes that go with peaceful, democratic ways of life.

We are happy to have you visit us. We are glad you have visited other countries. We feel sure that your contacts on your journey will enable you to return to Japan with new concepts of the life of the world, and with the firm belief that the United States wants nothing from you except justice and fairness and cooperation in the world's efforts to achieve peace and to live under peaceful conditions. We welcome you. We wish your country well. We hope you can rehabilitate your broken enterprises and turn them all into the pathway of cooperation and peace in behalf of all the peoples of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I should like to join in the words of welcome to our friends from Japan. It particularly interests me that they have been concerning themselves with the spiritual basis of peace. That is a field which we have not yet fully explored. It is something which it is necessary that we should explore.

It is a conviction of mine that wars, civil tumults, and all the ills which afflict mankind come from disobedience to the moral laws of the universe. We in America have to examine ourselves, you in Japan have to examine yourselves, all the nations of the world have to examine themselves, to see whether they are working in accordance with the moral laws of the universe, under which alone can peace be attained and maintained.

I am particularly glad that you ladies and gentlemen from across the Pacific Ocean have been concerning yourselves with the troubles in which the world today finds itself. (Applause.)

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, some months ago we were honored by a visit of distinguished representatives of the Parliament of West Germany. On that occasion the Senate extended to our visitors a warm and cordial welcome.

It gives me pleasure today to join my colleagues in extending the same kind of welcome to these distinguished representatives of Japan. I hope that as they leave here they will feel that this welcome on our part is a sincere one.

We told our friends from Western Germany that we welcomed them as allies in our present efforts to preserve the peace of the world. We welcome the people of Japan in the same world-wide effort.

When I visited Japan in 1935, I met a number of outstanding Japanese who expressed warm friendship for the American people and for the United States of America. On that visit I also met some of the war lords, who were not friendly toward the United States. I think it is only fair to say that, in my opinion, events have proved that they were not friendly to their own people. They believed in a caste system; they believed in imperialism; and they had no objection at all to seeing the rank and file of the Japanese people occupy the status of peasants.

Since General MacArthur has been in Japan, I think the Japanese people have come to realize that our chief aim in the present occupation there is to protect the Japanese people from the type of government which led them into war and kept down the average man from achieving the status in life to which we feel every citizen should be entitled.

Mr. President, we are very happy to know that the Japanese people have adopted a constitution which gives more rights to the working people and gives more rights to the women of that country and gives more self-government to the people of Japan.

This delegation comes to us at a critical period, but we are very glad they are here.

Mr. President, I simply wish that the parliament of Russia would send a delegation here and would give us a chance to address them. As a matter of fact, if they did not wish to do that, I wish they would invite us to go over there. If they would do that, I believe every Member of the Senate would accept the invitation provided they would promise that each one of us would be permitted to speak for as long as 5 minutes to the Russian people and let them know what our real aims are.

Again, Mr. President, I wish to assure our friends from Japan that we are sincere in telling them that we believe in the brotherhood of man, that we wish to cooperate with all friendly and peace-loving people of the world in striving to avoid another conflict which might destroy civilization, and that we wish to join with all other peoples in building up the nations of the world to the point where all may have a better opportunity to enjoy the kind of liberty and freedom which we in this country have been privileged to enjoy for many years.

(Applause.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. After these expressions by Members of the Senate of their feeling of good will and their greetings to this distinguished delegation, the Chair wishes to state that he has been advised that one of the members of the delegation from the Japanese Diet, who is a member of the Liberal Party of Japan, a close friend and associate of Prime Minister Yoshida, and a representative of the Government of Japan on this mission around the world, desires to express briefly a response to the generous welcome which has been accorded to them.

By unanimous consent, the Chair will recognize the Honorable Chojiro Kuriyama, a member of the Diet of Japan, to express his sentiments.

[Applause, Senators rising.]

Mr. KURIYAMA. Mr. President, honorable Members of the United States Senate: We are deeply grateful for the courtesy extended us today by the United States Senate. It is our sincere regret that Japan has broken almost a century-old friendship between the two countries. In spite of this big mistake on our part, the magnanimous forgiveness and generosity of America not only have allowed Japan to survive, but are helping her recovery.

It is gratifying to know that the leadership of America is rooted in Christianity.

The lawless aggression in Korea is again involving America in terrible sacrifices. We Japanese wholeheartedly support the action taken by the United Nations; and if you will permit us to do so, we pay highest respect to the courageous leadership of President Truman in this matter. [Applause.] I hope that Japan will be shown ways in which she can be of assistance in cooperation with the United States.

Mr. President, as some of the distinguished Members of this Senate have said, we went to Caux, Switzerland, in search of the true content of democracy. We found the ideology which will feed democracy in Japan, and at the same time which is the powerful answer to communism.

Now here we are to study the true heritage of great America. I feel that it will be a source of the greatest happiness to the people in Japan if we Japanese can rebuild and reconstruct our nation on the same principles that you in America have followed.

Although we have many things for which to thank America and Americans, on this occasion we just briefly express our sincere gratitude to the United States of America for its help and guidance.

Mr. President, honorable Members of the United States Senate, thank you again for your courtesy and kindness.

[Applause, Senators rising.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will say to the six members of the Japanese Diet who have been received on the Senate floor, that they are welcome to remain here as long as their convenience may dictate.

The Senate will now resume the consideration of legislative business.

GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1951

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, on July 11 the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes, which is the unfinished business of the Senate. I realize that a number of important extraneous matters were necessarily submitted to the Senate, and that long debates have taken place thereon. However, it seems to me that we ought to expedite consideration of the appropriation bill. As I understand, there remain practically only two or three amendments which are highly controversial. We are almost through reading the bill itself for committee amendments, and I should hope we might proceed to the point where we could vote, perhaps this afternoon, on at least one of these controversial amendments.

Everyone knows that with the new one-package approach to the annual appropriations, some time will be required in conference before the conferees agree. The quicker we get the appropriation bill into conference, the sooner we may be able to take at least some 3-day recesses for the benefit of the Senate as a whole. I sincerely hope that we shall expedite the appropriation bill, stay on the bill itself, and eliminate, so far as possible, speeches dealing with matters other than the appropriation bill. If we do that, and if we remain in session rather late this evening, until, say, 7 or 8 or 9 o'clock, we may accomplish quite a little in connection with the bill. I appeal to Senators on both sides of the aisle to cooperate to the end that we may get along with the bill as rapidly as possible.

I am not blaming anyone for the delay at all. I am only attempting to make a very sincere appeal for the expedition of business, in order that the appropriation bill may go to conference as soon as possible.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I wish to call the attention of the distinguished majority leader to the fact that the Banking and Currency Committee hope to have the new defense production bill ready for action on the floor of the Senate next Monday. We plan to work all of today and tomorrow, and we hope to finish it by tomorrow evening or tomorrow night.

The majority leader, of course, knows that there will be many items of difference between the House and Senate in regard to the appropriation bill, which, in its omnibus form, represents a new procedure, and that we do not yet know just how the conferees will be appointed and how they will act, whether there will be subcommittee conferees, and whether the various parts will then have to be consolidated. But in any event it will be quite a task to reach an agreement on this bill.

The majority leader knows there will be controversial matters in the defense production bill, he knows we have got to pass a tax bill, and he knows that everyone would like to get out of here by Labor Day. So it seems to me that, since we have been on the appropriation bill for so long and have spent so much time on extraneous and irrelevant matters, we could well afford to consider the three items that are before us now, which come under the head of general military measures. Certainly there will not be any amendment seriously pressed to cut down the appropriation for the Defense Department. We shall then have ECA and several other matters, including the point 4 program and the so-called Bridges-Byrd amendment, which will have to be considered. All those matters could be handled today, if each Senator who wishes to speak on an amendment would confine himself to the amendments and try to condense his remarks to not exceeding 10 minutes.

I hope very much that the Senate will cooperate with the plea of the majority leader to finish consideration of the pending bill either today or in a night session tonight.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Virginia for the statement he has made, especially in view of the fact that he advises the Senate that the Committee on Banking and Currency will work tomorrow in order to expedite consideration of the measure now before them dealing with the war situation which exists in Korea. I am also glad that he agrees that we should move along.

I do not want it understood that I am saying that the Senate of the United States or the Congress is anxious to adjourn. We are going to stay here as long as there is anything important to do, and we are going to do whatever is necessary with respect to the implementation of the effort dealing with the unusual Korean situation. However, it seems to me that probably after we move along with the appropriation bill, the conference reports upon social security and other matters, as well as the legislation implementing our effort to deal with the Korean situation, we may at that time be able to take recesses of 3 days at a time, always ready to return at a moment's notice if the President or the Congress so desires. There is not a Member of the Senate who cannot be here within from 24 to 48 hours, irrespective of where he may be in the United States.

RESUMPTION OF WORK ON THE SENATE CHAMBER

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, in view of the statement made by the majority leader, I conclude, as chairman of the committee of the Senate which has charge of the remodeling of the Senate Chamber, that we might as well notify the interested parties that, so far as this particular year is concerned, the Senate will be here possibly every third day—and I would agree to that.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I think the Senator's conclusion is correct. I have not discussed this other than in a cursory way, with certain Members of the Senate, but I do not believe anyone wants to move back into the old Supreme Court Chamber.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I would not want the work on remodeling the Senate Chamber resumed, I may say to the Senator from Illinois, unless it were expected that we would be gone for a substantial length of time. On the other hand, I should not want to interfere with the work of the Senate, which probably would result, if it should appear likely that we would have to meet at least every 3 days.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator knows that we are operating more or less on a day-to-day basis with the world situation before us.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. Neither the Senator from Illinois nor any other Senator can reach a definite conclusion as to what will be done. It seems to me, as a result of having talked with members of the Democratic Policy Committee and with Members on the Republican side of the aisle that we might probably take 3-day recesses for a short while, and in that way to give Senators an opportunity to return to their homes.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The point I had in mind was that before the Korean situation came up, it had been intended that when Congress adjourned, the contractors would continue work on the Senate Chamber. But as I see the situation at the moment, I think we had better postpone it for a while.

Mr. LUCAS. Conditions are so indefinite and the contingencies are so great as to what may or may not happen, I think it is advisable for the Senator to proceed along the line which the Senator from New Mexico has suggested.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senators be permitted to submit petitions and memorials, introduce bills and joint resolutions, and present routine matters for the RECORD, without debate.

Mr. TAFT. I object.

Mr. LUCAS. If the Senator from Ohio objects, I withdraw the request.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, that does not foreclose each individual Senator from asking unanimous consent.

REPORT ON LEND-LEASE OPERATIONS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States:

This is the thirty-first report to Congress on lend-lease operations, for the period ending March 31, 1950, furnished in accordance with section 5, subsection (b), of the act of March 11, 1941 (55 Stat. 32; 22 U. S. C., sec. 414 (b)).

The Government of Chile, in February 1950, arranged to pay the entire balance on its lend-lease accounts, thus providing for settlement in full of its lend-lease obligations. Efforts have been continued to complete the negotiation of settlements with the few countries which have not entered into final agreements for lend-lease, and to dispose of various claims, accounts, and other residual problems.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 28, 1950.

PETITIONS

Petitions were laid before the Senate and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

Resolutions adopted by the Townsend Clubs of St. Petersburg, and Townsend Club, No. 2, of Orange County, Orlando, both in the State of Florida, favoring the enactment of the so-called Townsend plan, providing old-age assistance; to the Committee on Finance.

ASSISTANCE FOR UNEMPLOYED TURTLE MOUNTAIN BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS—RESOLUTION

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference, and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, a resolution adopted by the governing body of the Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewa Indians, relating to assistance for the unemployed Indians in that band.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION OF THE GOVERNING BODY OF THE TURTLE MOUNTAIN BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS (AN UNINCORPORATED TRIBE)

Whereas this unincorporated tribe is an Indian organization as defined under the act of July 12, 1943 (Public Law 120, 78th Cong., 1st sess.); and

Whereas the advisory committee is endeavoring to seek employment and assistance for their members, but find that many of their members are having difficulties in securing employment in the Red River Valley due to flood and lateness of the spring, and will be unable to earn enough money for winter subsistence: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the governing body of the Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewa Indians urges and requests the Congress and Indian Office to set up projects on the reservation to provide employment for the unemployed able-bodied Indian men for the fall and winter month. Projects needed are graveling of all reservation roads, building of concrete culverts, clearing of land, drainage of swamps and sloughs, planting of trees, building of log homes, etc. These projects would be beneficial to the reservation and would also serve to provide work and subsistence for the employable that need assistance, and further, these projects would not cost much more than the usual cost of relief during the winter months; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Area Director, United States Congressman of North Dakota, and the Governor of the State.

CERTIFICATION

I, the undersigned, secretary of the advisory committee of the Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewa Indians, an unincorporated tribe, hereby certify that the advisory committee is composed of eight (8) members, of whom five constituting a quorum, were present at a meeting thereof duly and regularly called, noticed, covened, and held this 5th day of June 1950; that the foregoing resolution was duly adopted at such meeting by the affirmative vote of five members; and that the said resolution has not been rescinded or amended in any way.

Dated this 5th day of June 1950.

HENRY R. LAFOUNTAIN,
Secretary of the Advisory Committee.

CONSERVATION AND VALLEY AUTHORITY LEGISLATION—RESOLUTION OF WISCONSIN SOCIETY FOR ORNITHOLOGY

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have received this morning a resolution from the Wisconsin Society for Ornithology rightly opposing valley authority legislation as tending to weaken the administration and management of the fish and wildlife resources of our country by the respective States.

I very definitely agree in opposition to further efforts to set up these superstates like the Columbia Valley Authority which has been proposed. The president of the Wisconsin Society is Charles Nelson, of Waukesha, Wis., the vice president is John L. Diedrich, and the treasurer is Carl P. Frister, both of Milwaukee.

The editor of the magazine of the society is N. R. Barger, of Madison, associate editor is Rev. Samuel D. Robbins, Jr., of Mazomanie, Wis.

I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be appropriately referred and printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WISCONSIN SOCIETY FOR ORNITHOLOGY,
July 25, 1950.

The Honorable ALEXANDER WILEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At the annual convention of the Wisconsin Society for Ornithology, held at Two Rivers, Wis., from May 5 to 7, the following resolution was passed with reference to the reallocation of Federal responsibilities in conservation:

"Whereas the reorganization of Federal conservation activities into valley authorities will critically weaken the administration and management of the fish and wildlife resources of the United States; and

"Whereas we strongly oppose the delegation of these conservation activities to autonomous agencies responsible only to the President: Be it

"Resolved, That the Wisconsin Society for Ornithology record the wholehearted opposition of its membership to bills H. R. 894 and S. 1645 in the first session of the Eighty-first Congress; and that a copy of this resolution be sent to our delegates in the House of Representatives and the Senate."

Respectfully submitted.

MARY DONALD,
Secretary.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION—TELEGRAM FROM WISCONSIN ASSOCIATION OF REAL ESTATE BROKERS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, we are all aware that the most significant legislation which we are to shortly consider is S. 3936, the Defense Production Act—now being reviewed by our colleagues in the Senate Banking Committee. All those of us who are not members of that committee are following its work with closest attention, reviewing all of the elements in the controversy between those who contend that the bill goes much too far in regimenting our civilian economy and those who complain that it does not go far enough.

Already many groups in our population have expressed their grave concern to me and to my colleagues that the Korean emergency, while requiring tremendous support for our fighting troops, does not require the type of stringent dictatorial controls such as have been recommended by the President.

My Republican associates and I feel that the Korean emergency should definitely not be used as a pretext to slip over on us totalitarian controls which may not be necessary.

VOLUNTARY SELF-DISCIPLINE ESSENTIAL

To the greatest extent possible, we want to encourage the voluntary self-discipline and cooperation of our patriotic American people—cooperation to prevent runaway prices.

The real estate profession of my State has been particularly concerned about title 4 of S. 3936, which it feels is discriminating against them. As an indication of its judgment, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the body of the RECORD the text of a telegram which I have just received from Mr. Alfred E. Trenkamp, president of the Wisconsin Association of Real Estate Brokers, located in Milwaukee. Mr. Trenkamp rightly points out the need for Federal economy—cutting down on nonessential spending. I thoroughly agree, but just yesterday when we attempted to do this, our economy forces were defeated 28 for economy to 47 against. Obviously, Congress has not yet awakened to the need for economy in nonessential spending.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MILWAUKEE, WIS., July 27, 1950.

Senator ALEXANDER WILEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Wisconsin Association of Real Estate Brokers urges you to vote against title IV of Senate bill 3936 and companion House bill 9176 which we understand will control by Federal regulation all sales, values, leases, home sales, and real-estate transactions of all kinds and which authorizes Federal licensing of all real-estate transactions, etc. We object as a State professional group to being singled out for Federal control—if state of national emergency requires this step then it would seem apparent that all prices, wages, and all phases of our economy should be likewise restricted as a serious war emergency only with automatic provision repealing controls as soon as shooting stops. Likewise, it would seem rational that if such measures are necessary for defense that all Federal Government grants and aids to States and cities be suspended and withheld during emergency as such spending only serves to absorb scarce wartime materials and labor creating additional shortages. Urge your considered judgment.

ALFRED E. TRENKAMP,
President, Wisconsin Association of Real Estate Brokers.

CONGRATULATIONS TO SENATOR TOBEY FROM LLOYD C. DOUGLAS

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD the text of a letter recently received by our colleague, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], from the distinguished author, Lloyd C. Douglas, one of our great contemporary novelists, who has written such books as The Robe and Magnificent Obsession. After listening to the Senator's remarks over a recent broadcast of Meet the Press, Mr. Douglas wrote this letter, which is so unusual and represents so well the apprehension which is felt in the country today over the way the administration has been conducting national affairs that it merits inclusion in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LOS ANGELES, June 17, 1950.

MY DEAR SENATOR TOBEY: The writer, unknown to you, is in semiretirement because of age and frail health. There is almost nothing that I can do for my country at present (aside from the payment of very high taxes) but to applaud the minority group of fearless and honest men who speak and act for us at the Capitol.

Last night I heard you speak on the Meet the Press radio program.

It must have given you much satisfaction to be able to face your inquisitors—and the whole Nation—with the reckless, 2-o'clock-in-the-morning courage that no man can afford to exhibit unless he comes to the altar with clean hands and a pure heart.

You gave me a misty-eyed glow of pride that we are of the same race.

Gratefully yours,

LLOYD C. DOUGLAS.

SURVEY OF THE MERRIMACK AND CONNECTICUT RIVERS AND OTHER STREAMS IN NEW ENGLAND

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, section 205 of the Flood Control Act of 1950, which passed the Eighty-first Congress, was signed by President Truman and is now Public Law 516, contains the essential provisions of the Lodge-Furcolo bill calling for a survey of the Merrimack and Connecticut Rivers and other streams in New England. This section is, of course, an authorization and in order to be effective requires the appropriation of funds. As a member of the Appropriations Committee, my colleague, Senator SALTONSTALL, addressed a written inquiry to the Acting Chief of Engineers and received from him a reply containing assurance that there is in the omnibus appropriation bill sufficient funds to commence the work. In fact, the letter contains an assurance that "the Corps of Engineers will allocate funds to this investigation from whatever appropriation is provided." In view of the fact that the figure of $6,500,000 is included in the bill, there is reason to believe that, in the words of the Acting Chief of Engineers, "good progress can be made on the New England investigation." I ask unanimous consent that the letter of the Acting Chief of Engineers to Senator SALTONSTALL be printed in full at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, July 17, 1950.

Hon. LEVERETT SALTONSTALL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SALTONSTALL: Reference is made to your letter of July 13, 1950, in which you inquire whether the funds contained in the omnibus appropriation bill recently reported by the Senate Appropriations Committee are sufficient to provide for the survey of the Merrimack and Connecticut Rivers and other streams in New England as authorized in section 205 of the Flood Control Act of 1950, Public Law 516, Eighty-first Congress.

As provided in section 205 of the 1950 Flood Control Act, the survey of the New England rivers is to be financed from the regular appropriations made to the Corps of Engineers for carrying on authorized preliminary examinations and surveys for flood control and allied purposes. The amount which can be made available for the New England investigation will be allocated from the total amount contained in our appropriations for preliminary examinations and surveys. The budget estimate for preliminary examinations and surveys for fiscal year 1951 was $6,500,000. The appropriation passed by the House of Representatives reduced this amount to $3,500,000. The Senate committee action restored the item to the full amount of $6,500,000 as shown on page 264 of the Senate Committee Report No. 1941.

I can assure you that the Corps of Engineers will allocate funds to this investigation from whatever appropriation is provided in the act as finally enacted. The exact amount will depend, of course, upon the amount finally appropriated inasmuch as all of the preliminary examinations and surveys throughout the country must be financed from this item. If the amount recommended by the Senate committee is appropriated, good progress can be made on the New England investigation. If the appropriation is substantially less than the $6,500,000 recommended by the Senate committee, the progress of the investigation will necessarily be somewhat limited; but even in that event, we will make every effort to proceed as rapidly as possible.

Sincerely yours,

J. S. BRAGDON,
Brigadier General, Acting Chief of Engineers.

GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1951

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, when page 364 of the pending bill was reached late in the afternoon, I was necessarily absent from the floor. I had pending an amendment, which I wanted to call up at that time, to reduce the appropriation provided for in line 2, page 364, by $100,000. The committee amendment provides the sum of $221,244,500 for civil functions of the Corps of Engineers. The purpose of my amendment is to reduce that amount by $100,000, and to eliminate the item for planning the Dover Dam, which is found in the committee report at page 237, as follows:

Dover Lock and Dam, Cumberland River..... $100,000

Mr. President, I think my amendment should be agreed to, and I hope it may be considered at this time. There are now pending in the Senate and in the House of Representatives bills to include the development of the Cumberland River in the TVA system. The matter has not been brought up for consideration at this session, because the TVA is making a report, upon instructions of the President. In addition, certain information will have to be furnished by the Corps of Engineers. These reports will all be in before the beginning of the Eighty-second Congress, so early in the next session we should be able to get action one way or another to determine whether the Cumberland River will be further developed by the TVA or by the Corps of Engineers.

Mr. President, it is usually conceded that if the lower part of the Cumberland River is developed by the Tennessee Valley Authority, it would not build the dam which this $100,000 would be used to plan. Below Nashville, between the Cheatham locks and the mouth of the Cumberland River near its confluence with the Ohio River, the Corps of Engineers originally planned one high dam, but later changed the plan so as to have two low dams: the Dover Dam, and a dam near the mouth of the Cumberland River. The TVA plan would follow the original intention of the Corps of Engineers with only one dam near the mouth of the Cumberland. The Dover Dam would be between the Cheatham lock and the mouth of the Cumberland. That dam would not be built if the development were taken over by the TVA. This $100,000 is for planning. The dam could not be constructed within the next 3 or 4 years, at least in the present emergency. There would be no substantial delay if Congress decided that the Corps of Engineers should build the Dover Dam; and I feel that the spending of this money should be delayed in order to give us an opportunity in the next session of Congress to act upon the bill to determine whether the futher development of the Cumberland River should be undertaken by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

That is all I have to say in explanation, Mr. President. We can save $100,000 until the determination can be made, or we can run the risk of wasting $100,000 for plans which may never be used.

I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to be reconsidered in order that I may offer the amendment for consideration and action by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am obliged to object. The matter came up yesterday and it was voted to continue the plan now established by which the engineers build the dam on the Cumberland River and the TVA distributes the power. In my judgment, that has been found to be a very excellent way of building up the valley. Several dams have already been constructed and TVA transmission lines have been built and the power is being distributed within the area.

I hope the Senator will withdraw his amendment because it would interfere with the plans which have been carried out for many years. I have been living with the matter for 25 or 30 years. It started with the building of the dam at Muscle Shoals and it has progressed very well.

My friend from Tennessee has a plan to turn the building of the dams on the Cumberland over to the TVA. TVA would have to start an entirely new program. It would be very much more costly to the American people. It would not be so efficiently done by the TVA as it would be done by the Corps of Engineers, who have done it so well in the past. In addition to that, this item has already been passed upon, and the Senator's motion is not in order.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield for a question.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I should like to say that my motion would not be determinative. Is it not correct to say that whether this dam is to be built by the TVA or the Corps of Engineers would be determined in the bill itself? In other words, would we not merely be delaying the matter of the expenditure of the money until the next appropriation bill? Is not that correct?

Mr. McKELLAR. The committee passed on the matter at least 2 months ago. They are familiar with it. They reported it to the Senate. Now, on the floor of the Senate, like my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] yesterday, my friend from Tennessee has a plan of his own which he wants to work out. Why should a new proposal of this kind be started? That is something I cannot understand. I really cannot understand the reason or motive for it. What is the reason? Does the Senator from Tennessee object because of his antipathy, if I may so express it, to the Corps of Engineers? Have the engineers failed, in the opinion of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KEFAUVER. Of course I have no antipathy toward the Corps of Engineers. I have always supported the Corps of Engineers, as the senior Senator from Tennessee well knows.

Mr. McKELLAR. But the Senator does not want the Corps of Engineers to continue with this particular work.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I have very high respect for the Corps of Engineers. Since the electricity which is generated at the dams on the Cumberland is sold to the TVA, which has charge of the distribution of it, and the two rivers run almost parallel and both empty into the Ohio no more than 10 miles apart; therefore, from the viewpoint of flood control, the development of that section of the South, and the operation of our electrical systems, greater efficiency in operation would be gained if one organization operated both. That is no reflection or criticism on the Corps of Engineers. However, that issue would have to be settled when the pending bill is considered on the basis of the reports of the Corps of Engineers, the TVA, and also other evidence which will be brought before the committee. All I am asking in this amendment is that the expenditure of $100,000 for the planning of a dam, which the Corps of Engineers did not want to build, under the first report years ago, and which would not be built if the Cumberland is turned over to the TVA, be delayed until we have had an opportunity to have the other bill considered. That is no reflection upon the Corps of Engineers.

Mr. McKELLAR. This matter affects Tennessee, Kentucky, and the adjoining States of Alabama, Mississippi, and possibly also Georgia. It seems to me to be a very expensive route to take. It seems to be an experiment, whereas the present situation by which the engineers build a dam and then turn it over to the TVA to sell the power and collect the money and put it in the Treasury of the United States is a very much better way of handling the matter. It has been quite a successful method, and I hope it will not be interfered with. It is true that one of our newspapers is very much in favor of making the change, although I have not been able to ascertain the reason for it. The Senate voted on the amendment yesterday. The Senator had ample opportunity. He was not taken by surprise. It was considered yesterday. He was present in the Chamber all day except at the time the vote was taken. I see no reason why we should give unanimous consent now. I shall object to the unanimous consent being given, and I hope the Chair will sustain my objection that the motion is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from Tennessee objects to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which it agreed to the amendment on page 364, line 2, in order that I may offer an amendment to reduce the appropriation by $100,000 for the purposes which I have stated.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is the motion of the Senator in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider is in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well. Does the Senator wish to make a statement?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I have made my statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. I appeal to the Members of the Senate not to interfere with this provision of the bill, which has already been passed. It has been reported by a committee which heard all the evidence with reference to the matter. Every opportunity was given to be heard on the matter. I hope the Senate will stand by the committee and by what has been done heretofore by the Senate. The Corps of Engineers is one of our best organizations. I do not see why we should turn them down because someone has another plan which he thinks is better than the plan now in existence.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). A quorum is present.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment on page 364, line 2, was adopted.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, for the benefit of any Members of the Senate who were not present when the original colloquy occurred with reference to this matter, let me say that the purpose of the motion to reconsider is to permit me to offer an amendment to the committee amendment on page 364, in line 2, so as to reduce the figure "$221,244,500" by the sum of $100,000. The $100,000 has to do with funds appropriated for planning for the building of Dover lock and dam on the Cumberland River.

Mr. President, there has been considerable agitation in regard to this matter. Originally the Corps of Engineers wanted to build one dam on the Cumberland River, near where it empties into the Ohio River. That would have been a rather high dam. There was some objection to the building of the dam, because of some bottom land which might be flooded. Thereupon the Corps of Engineers changed its plan, and decided that instead of building the one high dam near the junction of the Ohio and Cumberland Rivers, to build a comparatively low dam there, and also to build a dam between the Cheatham lock and dam and the dam near the Ohio. Of course, we do not know whether the Corps of Engineers will again change its plans in that regard.

It is obvious that the $100,000 for the planning of the dam may never be used, because the dam may never be built. Even if the right to make the decision remains with the Corps of Engineers, it may return to the original plan, because there is a greater need for electricity. The one high dam would furnish more electricity than could be developed at the two low dams.

There has been quite a change in sentiment, in my opinion, among the people of the Cumberland Valley and among the people of Tennessee and Kentucky in regard to this matter. In my opinion, the great majority of the people who are interested in it wish to have only the one high dam built, and they wish to have the Cumberland developed by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. President, there is now pending in the House and also in the Senate a bill for the inclusion of the Cumberland Basin in the TVA system. The President of the United States has asked the Tennessee Valley Authority for a report in regard to the development of the Cumberland. An interim report has already been submitted; and within the next 6 weeks or 2 months we expect the final report to be submitted.

It is anticipated and generally stated that the TVA will recommend that, instead of building the two low dams, only the one high dam be built, as originally planned by the Corps of Engineers. If that is done, this $100,000 for planning would be utterly wasted, because it would represent money for plans for a dam which would never be built.

The reason for the change of attitude on the part of the business people and the citizens of this area is that with the industrial development of this section; with the development of the Arnold air-engineering development center at Tullahoma, on the former site of Camp Forrest; and the development of other defense plants, a great amount of electricity must be developed on the Cumberland. The industrialization of that section of the country requires more electricity, and these defense plants require adequate amounts of electricity.

Even Mr. Harry Dyer, who is chairman of the Nashville Chamber of Commerce's Cumberland River committee, and who formerly favored the building of the two low dams by the Corps of Engineers, now has made a speech in which he has said that he favors the inclusion of this project in the Tennessee Valley Authority system. The sentiment has developed all through that section in like manner.

Mr. President, this matter was submitted by the Secretary of the Interior, in a letter dated July 14, to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Works, the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ]. The Secretary of the Interior recommends that the proposed legislation be approved and that the Cumberland be developed by the TVA. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of his letter may be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES
DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., July 14, 1950.

Hon. DENNIS CHAVEZ,
Chairman, Committee on Public Works, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CHAVEZ: This is in response to your request for a report on S. 338, Eighty-first Congress, first session, entitled: "A bill to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended, so as to include thereunder the Cumberland River and Cumberland River Basin."

I recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments:

1. To insert the following language at the end of section 2 of the bill:

"All reservoir projects constructed, under construction, or authorized to be constructed in the Cumberland River Basin by or on behalf of the United States, and all use, control, and operation of such projects, together with all property, books, papers, data, contracts, equipment, and unexpended balances of appropriations, appertaining to these projects, and their appurtenant works, shall be transferred to the corporation, together with such personnel as may be agreeable to the Corporation and to the Secretary of the Army."

2. To strike sections 4 and 5 of the bill.

The following is in explanation of these recommendations:

1. The transfer of the Cumberland Basin projects to the Tennesee Valley Authority would eliminate unnecessary expense and insure continuity in the operation of the projects and the sale of low-cost power to ultimate consumers.

(a) By prior acts of Congress, eight reservoir projects have been authorized to be constructed in the Cumberland River Basin. Of these, one reservoir project (Dale Hollow) has already been constructed and is in operation; two projects (Center Hill and Wolf Creek) are still under construction; the construction of the remaining five projects (Three Islands, Stewart's Ferry, Old Hickory, Carthage, and Celina) has not yet started.

Under section 5 of the Flood Control Act of 1944 (58 Stat. 887, 890; 16 U. S. C. 825), the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to sell or dispose of "electric power and energy generated at reservoir projects under the control of the Department of the Army and in the opinion of the Secretary of the Army not required in the operation of such projects." The statute requires that, in the sale of such surplus power, preference be given to public bodies and cooperatives; that the power be sold at rates fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, and approved and confirmed by the Federal Power Commission, which would have regard to the recovery of the cost of producing and transmitting such electric energy, including the amortization of the investment allocated to power over a reasonable number of years; and that the transmission or disposition of the surplus power shall be in such manner as to encourage the most widespread use thereof at the lowest possible rates to consumers consistent with sound business principles.

(b) Acting pursuant to these directions, the Secretary of the Interior entered into negotiations with the Tennessee Valley Authority for the sale of the surplus power from the Dale Hollow, Center Hill, and Wolf Creek projects, and in anticipation of this sale the Tennessee Valley Authority constructed a transmission line which made possible the sale of Dale Hollow power at the bus bar and will provide such facilities as the other plants begin operation. This was the most practicable way of disposing of the surplus power to be generated at the Cumberland projects in conformity with the requirements above stated, especially since (1) approximately 70 percent of the Cumberland River Basin lies within the area now served with electricity produced at TVA plants, (2) approximately 80 percent of the electric-power requirements of the Cumberland Basin is being supplied by TVA, and (3) in its resource development program, which includes the widespread distribution of power at low cost to consumers, TVA needs additional sources of electric power in order to supply adequately the growing needs for electricity in its existing area, including that portion of the service area which lies within the Cumberland Basin.

Because of the geographic position of TVA's power system, both the Department of the Interior and the Tennessee Valley Authority considered that the existing Cumberland projects and any additional projects to be constructed in the Cumberland Basin would contribute most effectively to the purposes of the Flood Control Act of 1944, if the entire power output of these projects were sold to the Tennessee Valley Authority and marketed over its system. Thus, the sale of power from Dale Hollow, Center Hill, and Wolf Creek was intended as the initial step in the development of arrangements for the sale of power by the Department to the TVA. It was contemplated that, as additional projects would be constructed in the Cumberland Basin, the Department and the TVA would work out such amendments to the presently negotiated agreement as might be required to include the sale of power from such additional projects.

(c) In conformity with the requirement that the disposition of power shall be such that the ultimate consumers might benefit by the lowest possible rates "consistent with sound business principles," the Department has taken the view that all matters leading up to the disposition of the power be conducted in accordance with sound business principles and practices. Accordingly the negotiations with the TVA were conducted, so far as practicable, at arms' length, and with due regard to the statutory standards, with the consequent expenditure of such time and effort as would be warranted by a transaction involving a sale of power at an average amount of $3,500,000 per year over a period of 20 years, or a total of $70,000,000. The rates arrived at were based on the full utilization of an unregulated annual stream flow; the average of $3,500,000 for the entire power output of the projects, with a total installed capacity of 441,000 kilowatts, was based upon the normal or average flow as indicated by the long-time stream-flow records; and the variations in the annual payments were based upon deviations from the average stream flow. Prior to the execution of the contract these rates were informally submitted to the Federal Power Commission for confirmation and approval, and considerable attention was given to these rates by the Federal Power Commission, as well as by the staff in the Department of the Interior.

(d) The reason for the informal submission of the rates to the Federal Power Commission, and also the reason for the delay in the execution of the contract between the TVA and the Department was that the agreement was conditioned upon a satisfactory arrangement or operating agreement to be entered into between the TVA and the Department of the Army for the scheduling operations of these projects. This latter agreement has been completed. Without a satisfactory operating agreement, the contract for the sale of power would have had to be terminated, thus leaving the Department with a great amount of generating capacity to be disposed of otherwise, and leaving the TVA with a costly transmission line, but without the power and energy to be transmitted from these projects.

(e) In the last analysis, all the work done by the Department of the Army, the Department of the Interior, the Federal Power Commission, and the TVA in the sale or disposition of the surplus power from the Cumberland projects, centered about a bookkeeping transaction, in which the United States, through one of its agencies, generates power which is turned over to a second agency which delivers the power to a third agency at rates to be approved by a fourth agency, which power is to be accounted for by the third to the second agency, and by the second to a fifth agency, the Treasury of the United States. All this labor and consequent expense would have been avoided, and any future labor and expense will be avoided, if the power from the Cumberland projects is made available to the TVA to be accounted for in accordance with the provisions of the TVA Act.

(f) It is the view of this Department that further economies and greater benefits can be effected, if not only the surplus power but also the projects were turned over to the Tennessee Valley Authority, especially since this agency is in a position and is qualified to operate the projects for navigation and flood control, as well as for power purposes, under the policies of the TVA Act which are fully adequate to protect the public interest. If this is done there will be no division of authority between the TVA and the Army, and no need for operating agreements the requirements for which may from time to time introduce uncertainty concerning the success of the entire undertaking. In addition, the people of the Cumberland River Basin would be in a position to benefit from all the activities of the TVA in the same manner as the people in the basin of the Tennessee River and its tributaries.

(g) The transfer of these projects to the TVA is undoubtedly intended by this bill (S. 338). I recommend, however, that this intention be expressly stated, and therefore suggest the above stated amendment to section 2, although upon the enactment of this provision without the suggested amendment, the President may, under section 7 (b) of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended (48 Stat. 63, 16 U. S. C. 831f) exercises his authority to transfer this property to the corporation.

2. It is not necessary to increase the board from three to five members, and there is no need for a saving clause in this bill.

(a) I believe that the functions and undertakings of the corporation have been carried out in a most commendable and efficient manner by the three-man board of directors. I do not see that anything would be gained by an increase of the board by two additional members. Therefore I suggest that section 4 of the bill be eliminated.

(b) An examination of the bill suggests that there is no likelihood of any substantial constitutional questions arising out of this enactment, and therefore there is no need of a saving clause. This is especially so, since this bill would merely amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended, and the provisions would become part of the more comprehensive statute which already has a saving clause. Therefore, I recommend that the bill be further amended by eliminating section 5 thereof.

I am informed by the Bureau of the Budget that there is no objection to the presentation of this report to your committee. However, the Bureau of the Budget also informs me that pending a further report, to be submitted by the Tennessee Valley Authority, bringing up to date its previous report on the relationship between the Tennessee and the Cumberland Rivers (H. Doc. No. 107, 79th Cong., 1st sess.), it is not in a position to inform me on the relationship of the proposed legislation to the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

OSCAR L. CHAPMAN,
Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, the report of the Secretary of the Interior points out that at least 70 percent of the area of the Cumberland Basin is served by the TVA; that the electricity is sold by the Corps of Engineers at the bus bar to the Department of the Interior; and that the Department of the Interior, in turn, negotiates with the TVA for the sale of the power. So the negotiations go through that circuitous and wasteful route.

The Secretary of the Interior points out—and it is quite generally conceded—that in operations for flood-control purposes, and for the development of the greatest possible amount of electricity, these two river basins should be operated as a unit. Water can be stored for flood-control purposes in the Cumberland Basin at the same time that water is needed for hydroelectric purposes in the Tennessee Basin. As both these rivers are in the same electrical system, more prime power can be produced if both rivers are operated as a unit.

The elimination of this $100,000 would not decide the issue as to which agency will have charge of the further development of the Cumberland. The Eighty-second Congress will have to decide that question on the merits of and in line with the recommendations of the various agencies.

All that the amendment which I propose to offer would do would be to defer the spending of this $100,000 for planning until the next appropriation bill comes along, by which time we hope this issue will be decided.

Mr. President, I find that this item of $100,000 was not included in the bill as it was passed by the House of Representatives. It is true that it is covered in the table which appears on page 237 of the report made by the Appropriations Committee to the Senate. However, in examining the testimony which has been presented to the Appropriations Committee, I find that even the representative of the Corps of Engineers, when he appeared before the committee, failed to request the money for the planning of the Dover Dam at this time. Colonel Potter testified before the committee, but he did not refer to the Dover Lock and Dam or to the $100,000 here involved.

So it appears that even the Corps of Engineers would not be greatly upset if this matter were deferred until this larger issue can be determined. Colonel Potter's testimony is to be found at page 770 of the report on the civil functions appropriations, Department of the Army.

Of course, Mr. President, we are looking for places where we can economize. It is true that the amount which is the subject of the amendment I wish to propose is not a comparatively large amount, but if the Corps of Engineers changes its mind in regard to whether to build one high dam, instead of two low dams, then this $100,000 will be wasted. If the Cumberland is to be developed by the Tennessee Valley Authority—in other words, if the bill which we hope will be brought up at the next session is passed—this $100,000 will be wasted, thrown away, and I do not want to throw away $100,000 of the taxpayers' money if I can prevent it.

This item was not included in the bill by the House of Representatives. So far as I can find from the testimony, the Corps of Engineers have not said they need this sum, or at least have not urged the appropriation of any money for the planning of the Dover Dam.

The President has asked all the agencies involved to submit a report in the interest of the orderly development of the Cumberland to assure that the water power potential of the Cumberland, particularly in respect to the development of hydroelectric power, is made available most fully for the greatest benefit of that area and of the Nation.

Therefore, Mr. President, it seems to me that my motion for the reconsideration of the vote by which the committee amendment on page 364 in line 2 was adopted should be agreed to, and that the item of $100,000 should be eliminated and not subject to the risk of wanton waste.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. KEM. Does the Senator have in mind extending the jurisdiction of TVA to the Cumberland Valley? Is that the plan favored by the Senator?

Mr. KEFAUVER. That is the purpose of my bill which is now pending before the Public Works Committee.

Mr. KEM. And is that the purpose of the Senator's motion?

Mr. KEFAUVER. No. The purpose of the motion is to defer this $100,000 for planning until the next session of Congress, when it can be brought up in the next appropriation bill, to give Congress an opportunity to decide how it wants the Cumberland developed. This is no decision, one way or other, on how it is going to be developed in my motion.

Mr. KEM. But the extension of the jurisdiction of TVA to the Cumberland Valley is the ultimate objective which the Senator has in mind, is it not?

Mr. KEFAUVER. There is such a bill pending. The objective we have in mind now is to see that the Cumberland is properly developed. The TVA does not want the job particularly; its directors have not asked for it. Our first objective is to see that the Cumberland is developed properly. The Corps of Engineers originally in its plan did not want to build this project. It wanted to build only one dam, to be located near the point at which the Cumberland empties into the Ohio. It has changed its plans.

In view of the great need of and increased demand for electricity, it is entirely reasonable that they may again change their plans. In any event, if either that contingency happens or if it were turned over to the TVA, this money would of course be wasted. I can see no harm to be done by delaying the planning of this dam or by delaying the appropriation of money for the dam, until the next appropriation bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is it not true that as a general policy the Corps of Army Engineers in building dams tends to favor low dams which do not generate much power?

Mr. KEFAUVER. That, I understand, has been the general policy in the past. I think that more recently the engineers have been building dams for the purpose of generating more electricity than they did heretofore. It is everywhere recognized that the building of the one dam, instead of two, would furnish a great deal more electricity for a section of the country which is growing rapidly, and which has several very important defense projects, including the Arnold Air Engineering Development Center at Tullahoma. Huge amounts of electricty are needed there. I think if Congress decides this river is to be developed by the Army Corps of Engineers, it may later decide to build only the one dam, and not the Dover Dam. I am reasonably sure Dover Dam will not be built if the TVA should be authorized to develop the Cumberland.

Mr. President, I hope the motion will be agreed to and that this amendment may be adopted. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to reconsider the vote by which the amendment on page 364, line 2, was agreed to. Upon that question the yeas and nays have been requested.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, was the request for the yeas and nays not sufficiently seconded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was not. It requires 10, and there were but 5. The demand was not sufficiently seconded. The question now is upon agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to reconsider.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Has any amendment been agreed to as yet in chapter X of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No amendment has as yet been agreed to in chapter X.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I offer an amendment to the first committee amendment, on page 374, and ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the committee amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 374, line 19, after the word "diem", the committee proposes to insert "and contracts with not to exceed 23 such individuals may be renewed for 1 year."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma desire to offer an amendment to that committee amendment?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I offer a clarifying amendment to the committee amendment on page 374, line 19, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 374, line 20, it is proposed to strike out "such individuals" and insert "temporary or part-time employees."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma to the committee amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, just a word generally about the bill before I discuss the amendment. Chapter X was considered by the House before the Korean crisis developed. The bill then came to the Senate. The Senate committee considered the bill, chapter X, before the crisis in Korea became acute. So it may be said that what the Senate committee did was to prepare this bill for peacetime activities. More recently, the military authorities have submitted to the Senate a supplemental budget. That budget was cut to fit the bill as recommended by the Senate committee. So when the military authorities considered this chapter, they submitted three clarifying amendments, and they then submitted their supplemental budget to fit the remainder of the bill. Therefore, if the Senate should see fit to pass the bill as reported by the committee, it would be exactly as the authorities expect the bill to be passed by the Congress.

Their supplemental budget would then fit into this bill. The first amendment, the one I have suggested, was requested by the military authorities and was authorized by the committee.

This amendment will follow the intent of the committee in its amendment in allowing for the renewal of contracts with temporary or part-time employees for 1 year and at the same time will allow the National Security Resources Board to continue to hire intermittent employees in accordance with present law.

There are approximately 23 temporary and 75 intermittent employees working for the Board. As the amendment is presented the words "such individuals" applies to both temporary and intermittent employees. Since the renewal of contracts has application to temporary employees, the corrective amendment is needed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma to the committee amendment is agreed to, and without objection, the committee amendment, as amended, is agreed to.

The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 375, line 11, after the word "conclusive", to strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$3,500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

FURTHER TEMPORARY APPROPRIATIONS, 1951

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as we all know, the pending appropriation bill cannot become the law by the 1st of August. We have already had to pass a continuing joint resolution in order to keep the Government going during the month of July. The House has passed a further continuing joint resolution for the month of August, and yesterday it was referred to the Senate Committee on Appropriations, which today ordered it reported. From the Committee on Appropriations, I report favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 512) making further temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1951, and for other purposes, and I submit in connection therewith a report (No. 2183).

I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 512) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1951

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II—Department of Defense—Office of the Secretary of Defense—Salaries and expenses," on page 376, line 2, after the word "conclusive", to strike out "$11,000,000" and insert "$11,300,000."

The next amendment was, on page 414, after line 11, to insert:

PUBLIC WORKS

For construction, installation, and equipment of temporary or permanent public works, naval installations, and facilities for the Navy, as authorized by the act of June 16, 1948 (62 Stat. 459), and the act of June 17, 1950 (Public Law 564, 81st Cong.); major repairs and improvements to the Davisville pier, Naval Base, Newport, R. I.; furniture for public quarters; personnel in the Bureau of Yards and Docks and other personal services necessary for the purposes of this appropriation; and engineering and architectural services as authorized by section 3 of the act of April 25, 1939 (34 U. S. C. 556); $62,928,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, to the committee amendment I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma to the committee amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 414, line 24, after the word "expended" and before the period, it is proposed to insert the following: "Provided, That the funds appropriated by the act of June 25, 1948 (62 Stat. 1027), for construction of two new storehouses at Adak, Alaska, may be used for the conversion of existing facilities, if the Secretary of the Navy determines such action would result in a savings to the Government."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am informed that this amendment will save the Government over $4,500,000. Public Law 653 of the Eighty-ieth Congress authorized the Navy to construct two storehouses at a cost of $6,000,000. The first increment of $1,300,000 has been appropriated. Since then it has been determined that surplus Army transit sheds could be converted to provide the needed storehouses. The Facilities Review Board and the Comptroller General indicated that additional authorization would be required for the Navy to utilize its funds for the conversion of the sheds. The amendment would do this. The Navy estimates that the $1,300,000 already appropriated would be sufficient to take care of the entire matter, making a saving of $4,500,000 in estimated costs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the committee amendment, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Research," on page 415, line 11, after the word "expended", to strike out "$43,383,000" and insert "$43,083,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Service-wide supply and finance," on page 416, line 8, after the word "salaries", to strike out "$200,000,000" and insert "$209,292,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Service-wide operations," on page 417, line 1, after the word "salaries", to strike out "$94,261,000" and insert "$100,281,000."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, to the committee amendment I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated, and I also have an amendment to offer to the next committee amendment. After action on the amendments I shall explain their effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma to the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 417, line 2, it is proposed to strike out "$100,281,000" and insert "$99,281,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Island governments," on page 417, line 6, after the word "Islands", to strike out "$1,500,000" and insert "$785,000."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, to that amendment I offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 417, line 6, it is proposed to strike out "$785,000", and insert "$1,785,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the effect of the two amendments to the committee amendments just agreed to is to reduce the appropriations for service-wide operations by $1,000,000, and to increase the appropriations for island governments by the same amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title V—Department of the Air Force—Acquisition and construction of real property," on page 419, after line 12, to strike out:

For liquidation of obligations incurred pursuant to authority granted under this head in the "Second Supplemental Appropriation Act, 1950," or authorized to be transferred to this head by the "National Military Establishment Appropriation Act, 1950," to remain available until expended, $25,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 419, after line 18, to insert:

For construction, installation, and equipment of temporary or permanent public works, military installations, and facilities for the Air Force, as authorized by the act of March 30, 1949 (Public Law 30, 81st Cong.), the act of October 27, 1949 (Public Law 415, 81st Cong.), the act of May 11, 1949 (Public Law 60, 81st Cong.), and the act of June 17, 1950 (Public Law 564, 81st Cong.), without regard to sections 1136 and 3734, Revised Statutes, as amended, including hire of passenger motor vehicles, to remain available until expended, $164,784,000, of which $25,000,000 is for liquidation of obligations incurred pursuant to authority granted under this head in the Second Supplemental Appropriation Act, 1950, or authorized to be transferred to this head by the National Military Establishment Appropriation Act, 1950.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Maintenance and operations," on page 422, line 4, after the word "otherwise", to strike out "$1,010,000,000" and insert "$1,027,662,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Air National Guard," on page 426, line 16, after the word "owned", to insert "or State-owned"; in line 17, after the word "any", to strike out "State or"; and in the same line, after the word "subdivision", to strike out "thereof" and insert "of a State."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Salaries and expenses, administration," on page 427, line 18, after the word "station", to strike out "$55,620,000" and insert "$58,545,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title I—General provisions," on page 441, after line 23, to strike out:

SEC. 626. No payment shall be made from appropriations in this chapter to any officer on the retired lists of the Regular Army, Regular Navy, Regular Marine Corps, or Regular Air Force, who for himself, or for others is engaged in the selling of, or contracting for the sale of, or negotiating for the sale of, to any agency of the Department of Defense, any war materials or supplies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 442, line 6, to change the section number from "627" to "626."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 442, line 10, to change the section number from "628" to "627."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 442, line 22, to change the section number from "629" to "628."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 443, line 3, to change the section number from "630" to "629."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, we have now finished, I think, the chapter which we have been considering this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was the last committee amendment in chapter X.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I believe most people will agree that the best way to reduce expenditures is to reduce individual items. A general across-the-board percentage cut hits all agencies affected equally even though there is bound to be more fat in some agencies than in others. This method is called a meat-ax approach because the cutting is done with a broad blade and the actual severing is accomplished by brute force. You cannot trim off excess fat with a meat ax—it cuts in a straight line across the lean as well as the fat.

CUTTING APPROPRIATIONS SHOULD BE DONE CAREFULLY—WITH A SURGEON'S KNIFE

Trimming selected items more closely resembles the use of a surgeon's knife. A surgeon's knife is extremely sharp and fat can be trimmed neatly without cutting into the lean. Thus the fat in an individual bureau can be cut back without harming the bureau itself.

The surgeon's knife method is the one I have been trying to use. In trying to be selective, I have made 68 separate proposals for reductions so far. The amounts of these cuts have ranged from $1 to $263,483,000. When added together they would have made a total reduction of three-fourths of a billion dollars below the amounts in the bill before us and nearly a billion below the budget. I have not finished these efforts to make selective cuts. I will have a great many more proposals before we finish this bill. And yet almost every time I start to apply the knife, sharp and delicate though it is, the Senate has gently but no less definitely placed a sheath over the blade. "Put that thing down," they say, "you're liable to hurt somebody."

First, may I say that I blame myself most of all for my failure to get the Senate to accept the many selective cuts which I have proposed. The cause, I think, has been a good one but there has apparently been something in my manner and methods which has offended many of my colleagues. If I have shown any smug self-righteousness, may I assure the Senate that it was unintentional and I most sincerely beg the pardon of my colleagues. I happen to dislike self-righteousness most of all, because it shuts off the possibility of growth and is essentially uncharitable to others and if I have sinned in this respect, as some of my colleagues obviously think, I shall try to rid myself of this fault in the future.

I can only wish that abler, better, more conciliatory, and more experienced men than I had taken up this battle who could have carried it through with greater success and who would not have aroused the hard feelings which I apparently have done. There are very many such men in the Senate, but, unfortunately, they have not come forward in this instance. As is too often the case, the team has had to depend on a scrub and second-rater who has failed to do justice to the cause which he tried to represent. I only hope that the burden will be assumed next year by better men and then I shall be glad to step back and let them take the lead and serve myself only as a dishwasher and possibly a factual hod-carrier for their efforts. I would do this all the more gladly because it has been extremely unpleasant for me to get up again and again to move a reduction in appropriations and to feel that I was incurring the displeasure of colleagues whom I respect.

But while I wish to take my full share of the blame for the failure of our body to make selective economies, I am inclined to believe that the causes for this failure lie far deeper than my own personal faults, real though these are.

ORGANIZATION OF SENATE MAKES SELECTIVE CUTS DIFFICULT

In the first place, it is clear that the very organization of the Senate makes selective economies difficult, if not impossible. For the members of the Appropriations Committee, having thrashed these issues out and having arrived at a recommendation, feel bound in loyalty to each other to defend the items for which big appropriations are being asked. We have seen many times ranking minority members of the Appropriations Subcommittees rising to defend specific figures and insisting that the appropriations cannot be cut by a single dollar. Then I have also noticed that the Senators who are interested in the appropriations under a given chapter in the bill are generally on the floor in force when that chapter is up for consideration. Thus, the Senators from the farming States were present in large numbers when the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, chapter VI, came up and overwhelmingly defeated my proposal to reduce these appropriations. I was similarly bowled over as I tried to reduce specific items for roads by $100,000,000 in this time of great stress. Similarly, when the appropriations for the Interior Department, chapter VII, were under consideration and I tried to cut $90,000,000 for reclamation and reduce other items, I saw large numbers of Senators on the floor from the mountain and semiarid States who naturally resisted these cuts. When the rivers and harbors section, chapter IX, which is euphoniously referred to as the civil functions of the Army appropriation came up, I looked about me and saw the serried ranks of the Senators from the regions of the Gulf, the lower Mississippi, the Missouri, and the Arkansas Rivers. These men believe in all good faith in the projects which would benefit their communities and were strong in their support of the recommended appropriations.

On the other hand, the Senators whose interests were not immediately involved in the making of the specific appropriations, and whose interests were only general in that they primarily represented taxpayers tended not to be on the floor—with many honorable exceptions, of course—when these items came up for consideration. This was perfectly natural, excusable, and perhaps inevitable. For them to have stayed on the floor and joined in the fight item by item would have required not only many hours but actually may days of dull, dreary work, besides the weeks of study and preparation required. In the meantime, they would have had to miss many vital committee meetings, fall behind on their heavy correspondence, arouse the ire of constituents by not seeing them when they called, and go through a very unpleasant process to no apparent avail. The special interests were therefore concentrated and determined, while the general interests were scattered, diffused, and unorganized. It is small wonder, therefore, that no cuts were made.

Secondly, our procedures in the Senate make it very difficult for us to consider an appropriations bill intelligently on the floor. For again and again, while we were considering specific chapters, Senators would rise and speak at length for hours on some perfectly extraneous subject. This wore out and discouraged many who were anxious to take part. I would humbly suggest—and as a new Member I do so humbly—that we would make more progress if we were to accept a rule of germaneness so that up to a given hour, say 5 o'clock, we would only consider and speak upon the subject before the House and then after that hour, let any Senator speak on any subject about which he felt a concern, whether that question be sex perverts in the Government, Formosa, Kamchatka, or Timbuctoo. We would get infinitely more work done under such a rule and yet Senators would still have the right of free and unlimited debate.

Finally—and I say this with timidity—I have come to suspect that those who urge the superiority of selective cuts to the meat-ax method of general cuts tend to lose some of their enthusiasm for the selective method when it is actually employed. The suspicion occurs to me also that possibly one reason why some Senators prefer the method of general cuts is because if they vote for specific cuts, they incur the wrath of special interest groups while if they vote for general cuts, they get popular credit for standing for economy and thus compel the President and the executive departments to bear the popular opprobrium of making the specific economies to carry out the broad sweeping and indefinite reductions of 10 percent, 15 percent, or 20 percent, for which the swingers of the meat ax have voted. If I am uncharitable in these surmises, I hope that my colleagues and the public will pardon me.

I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a list of the proposals for reductions which I have proposed, their amounts, and references to their explanations.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. DOUGLAS. Now, Mr. President, I am well aware of the fact that knives are dangerous. But, with a deficit of $5,000,000,000 facing us even before the Korean situation, a major surgical operation was even then in order. With the present international crisis, which is not a possibility but actually upon us, such an operation is already well under way and, while increasing taxes are needed, we simply must cut civilian expenses as well. For we are confronted with needs far greater than combating inflation. Manpower and resources are needed for our very security, and if we precommit ourselves to huge expenditures for nonessential items, what happens when we find we should have been using these resources to protect our own safety?

MAY HAVE TO RESORT TO A MEAT AX

For this reason, since I have not had what would be called marked success in my attempts to use a surgeons' knife, I shall probably be forced to resort to the good old meat ax.

In my office this morning I looked at a surgeons' scalpel and at a meat ax, and I debated for some time whether I should bring those two instruments to the floor of the Senate. I decided that it would be somewhat undignified to do so. Therefore, following the example of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] I will say that I have them here in a suitcase. If anyone wishes to look at them, I shall be very happy to show them, and admission will be by ticket only.

The use of the surgeon's knife requires great care and I can certainly vouch for its being difficult and time consuming. The meat ax is easy. Just raise it above your head and come down on the bureaus with a resounding whack. But before doing this—being reluctantly pushed into wielding an unscientific meat ax—

A "SHARP MEAT AX WIELDED WITH CARE"

I intend to try one more approach; namely, a very sharp meat ax wielded with care.

I send to the desk an amendment for myself and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] which I shall call "The sharp meat ax wielded with care." It is a substitute for the committee amendment striking out the Thomas-Taber features of the House bill.

Section 1001 of this amendment reads:

Reductions in appropriations contained in this act are hereby made in the sum of $1,000,000,000. Such reductions shall be made in the following manner:

I may say that the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] proposes a reduction of $800,000,000 across the board. Our amendment proposes a reduction of $1,000,000,000, and orders those reductions to be made in selected areas.

This I quote from the first part of this amendment:

(a) Funds appropriated in this act for supplies and materials, for lands and structures, and for Federal aid postwar highways, shall be reduced by $500,000,000: Provided, That the Director of the Bureau of the Budget is empowered to make such reductions among the departments and agencies in the executive branch of the Government in such a manner as to provide for the most efficient use of the Nation's manpower and resources consistent with prevailing needs for an adequate national defense and a sound national economy.

FIVE-HUNDRED-MILLION-DOLLAR REDUCTION IN CONSTRUCTION ITEMS

Thus, the one-half of the reduction would be made on civilian construction. Most of it, of course, would have to be taken from rivers, harbors, navigation, flood control, reclamation projects, and highways, but not necessarily all of it. Throughout the bill we find a great many construction items which could be reduced. Furthermore, part of these reductions would be made from supplies and materials, most of which go for construction, but by no means all of it.

Paragraph (a) therefore specifically gives to the Bureau of the Budget the power to make these cuts, but it also specifies the areas in which reductions are to be made. Paragraph (a) also charges the Budget Bureau with the responsibility to see that these cuts are made in such a manner as to provide for the most efficient use of the Nation's manpower and resources consistent with prevailing needs for an adequate national defense and a sound national economy.

The total amounts budgeted for construction—and on this point Members of the Senate should consult page 13 of Summary of Obligations by Objects, prepared by the Bureau of the Budget—for nonexempt items, the exemptions being listed in section 1002 of my amendment, is about $1,040,000,000.

Total budgeted amounts for supplies and materials which are nonexempt in my amendment is about $820,000,000. The total amount in the bill for Federal aid postwar highways will be between $405,000,000 and $385,000,000 depending on the final figure adopted in conference. This makes a total of about $2,225,000,000 from which the $500,000,000 reduction provided for in paragraph (a) would be drawn. This is a 22-percent reduction below the budget although since some reductions have already been made in the bill before us, the actual cut would amount to about 25 percent in this area.

FIVE-HUNDRED-MILLION-DOLLAR REDUCTION IN ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSE

The rest of the billion-dollar reduction or the other five hundred million is made in pragraph (b), which reads:

(b) Funds appropriated in this act for personal services, travel, transportation of things, communications services, rents and utilities, printing and reproduction, other contractual services, and equipment shall be reduced by $500,000,000 which reduction shall be made among the departments and agencies in the executive branch of the Government on a pro rata basis: Provided, That reductions in personnel shall, where practicable, be made by eliminating a total of 5 percent of the personnel provided for in the President's budget and the filling of a total of not more than one-half of all vacancies which occur by reason of death, resignation, or otherwise: Provided further, That the reductions provided for in this subsection among the departments shall be made on a department-wide basis and the secretaries of the departments are empowered by means of transfer and adjustments, to keep the agencies within their respective departments at a maximum of efficiency: Provided further, That the Director of the Bureau of the Budget is empowered, by means of transfers and adjustments to administer the reductions provided for in this subsection among the nondepartmental and independent agencies in such a manner as to provide for a maximum of efficiency: Provided further, that hereafter, the amount of annual leave for Government employees, including employees of the Postal Service, shall be at the rate of 20 days per year and the amount of sick leave shall be at the rate of 12 days per year for classified and wage-board employees (except that no annual leave nor sick leave shall be granted to any Government employee who has not been in continuous Government service for at least 1 calendar year).

This paragraph apportions a $500,000,000 reduction among the departments and agencies on a pro rata basis. But it specifies the areas where the reductions are to be made so that Congress would not be completely abdicating the power of appropriations.

Paragraph (b) would empower the secretaries of the various departments, however, to maintain a maximum of efficiency by means of transfers and adjustments between the various bureaus within the respective departments. The Bureau of the Budget would have this power with respect to the nondepartmental and independent agencies, some of which may be too small to completely absorb these cuts by themselves while others can absorb more than their prorated share.

The total amounts budgeted for those items in the nonexempt agencies in the categories from which reductions would be made are approximately as follows:

Personnel	$3,560,000,000
Travel	138,000,000
Transportation of things	42,000,000
Communications	35,000,000
Rent and utility services	103,000,000
Printing and reproductions	28,000,000
Other contractual services	347,000,000
Equipment	298,000,000
Total	4,551,000,000

Thus, the $500,000,000 reduction would amount to a cut of about 11 percent of the total amounts budgeted for these purposes. However, since the amounts provided for in the bill before us are somewhat less than the budgeted amounts the actual reduction would be closer to 12 or 12½ percent.

PERSONNEL REDUCTIONS

Reductions in personnel are to be made by eliminating 5 percent and then filling only one-half the vacancies to accomplish further reductions.

This amendment differs very sharply from the Thomas-Taber and the Jensen amendments, because the combination of the Thomas-Taber and Jensen amendments in the House provided for filling only one-tenth of the vacancies, with a cut of 10 percent superimposed upon this. This would mean a reduction in personnel of over 30 percent by the end of the year and an average cut for the year of over 20 percent. My proposal is for a cut of 5 percent, and then for filling only one-half of the vacancies.

I may say that my initial estimate of a cut of 5 percent is built up from two items, first, eliminating the 2 percent of Government employees who are the most inefficient; then, if we cut the leave of classified and wage-board employees from 26 working days to 20, or a cut of from five and a half calendar weeks to four calendar weeks, and reduce sick leave from 3 weeks to 2⅗ weeks, we effect a saving of around 3 percent in the number of governmental employees. So that by dismissing the most inefficient 2 percent, and reducing Government leave, which will save 3 percent, we can effect a personnel reduction of 5 percent, and, in addition to that, fill only half the vacancies which occur.

With increasing needs for manpower in the Defense Establishment and war production, I cannot believe this would work any great hardship on the workers themselves. The displaced workers would be able to find jobs elsewhere. They would be transferred from the departments which are overstaffed into agencies of the national defense or into private jobs which will be understaffed. The net result would be a transfer from places where the employees are less efficient into places where they are more efficient.

This is especially true since only 5 percent are to be subject to a reduction in force while other personnel reductions would be made by filling only one-half of the vacancies which occur because of death, resignation, or otherwise. Personnel turn-over is about 26 percent so that filling one-half of the vacancies which occur during 1 year would amount to about 7 percent.

When this is combined with the 5 percent eliminated by a reduction in force we would have a total over-all reduction for the first year of 12 percent. The paragraph contains the qualifications "insofar as practicable" to allow for exceptional cases where turn-over is at an unusually high rate or where the provision would work a hardship on agencies in keeping staffed with key personnel. Meanwhile, personnel generally is only one of several categories where reductions would be made. It may be that some agencies would prefer to make greater cuts in travel or other categories and less in personnel. This flexibility would operate with respect to all the areas selected for reductions since the location of soft spots may vary from agency to agency.

REDUCE AND EQUALIZE ANNUAL AND SICK LEAVE

While reductions in personnel would ordinarily be made to the extent of 12 percent, actual manpower would be reduced only about 10 percent. This is true because reducing the annual and sick leave of classified and wage-board employees to 20 days would mean that each employee so reduced would put in about 3 percent more actual working time. Since postal workers' leave would be increased, however, the net gain in actual hours worked per employee would be only about 2 percent, which can be subtracted from the cut of 12 percent to make a net manpower reduction in the civilian agencies of 10 percent. Furthermore, the leave provision would apply to all Government employees, whether they work for agencies in the exempt or nonexempt categories. This would increase the manpower in the Defense Establishment and other agencies which are doing work vital to national defense.

I have previously presented the case for setting annual leave at 20 days, and I will not burden the Senate with further arguments on this point. I will simply say that 20 working days, or 1 month with week ends, is long enough for a vacation, and is still very liberal in comparison with that given by private employers. This would still be better than the leave given by 99 44/100 percent of private employers. The present 26 days of leave is excessive, because that number of days, on a basis of a 5-day week, is 5⅕ weeks. When there are added 15 days of sick leave, which makes 41 days, and 8 holidays, making 49 days, plus the other days of leave on the occasions of visits of Brazilian and other Presidents and when the weather is hot, the total leave given to Government workers is much larger than appears on its face. It is unjustified at any time, and certainly in the period which is close to a national emergency.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHERRY. I merely wish to ask a question. I did not hear the beginning of the Senator's address. Is the proposal the Senator is now speaking of a general over-all cut in the bill?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes. I shall be glad to furnish the Senator a copy of my address.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to have it. Does the distinguished Senator set out item by item what he intends to cut?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. In all the chapters?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Oh, no; it is a general cut, but it is to be applied to specific areas. In brief, it calls for a reduction of $500,000,000 on construction, supplies, and materials, and $500,000,000 on transportation, personal services, communications, and so forth. The cuts are divided in that manner. The total cut is $1,000,000,000, or approximately $200,000,000 greater than that provided in the so-called Bridges-Byrd amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not want to belabor this matter. I am trying to get the picture. Would the proposed cut apply to all construction projects throughout all the chapters of the bill?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. And the same is true with respect to transportation?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Personnel and transportation and other areas. I hope the Senator will be given a copy of my address.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator yield for one more question, please?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Is the cut to be made by the department heads, or does the Senator in his amendment provide for the cuts?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Within the departments the personnel and other cuts are to be made by the departments. For the nondepartmental and independent agencies the Bureau of the Budget will make the apportionment of the personnel and other cuts. The Bureau of the Budget will make the cuts for construction materials and supplies. But there are certain standards which we lay down which will direct them in doing this, namely, on the personnel item a 5 percent cut in the number of persons aided by a reduction in annual leave and then filling only one-half of the vacancies which occur.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad to yield for another question.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the head of the department be the one who can use his best judgment as to where the cut is to be applied?

Mr. DOUGLAS. On everything except construction.

Mr. WHERRY. That is what I want to know. Does the Senator provide for the cut on construction by items then, or does the department head with respect to each chapter of the bill make the cuts?

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Bureau of the Budget makes the construction cut of $500,000,000. The Bureau is directed to cut materials, construction and supplies for the nondefense and the nonexempt agencies $500,000,000.

Mr. WHERRY. So the Senator's amendment applies only to appropriations for construction outside of military needs?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Oh, yes. As a matter of fact, the list of exemptions is very similar to that provided for in the so-called Bridges-Byrd amendment, with one or two exceptions which I shall mention later.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. As I understand, the Senator's amendment provides for a cut of $500,000,000 in construction, and so forth, and a cut of $500,000,000 on transportation and personal services and so forth.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. So the amendment provides for a total cut of $1,000,000,000?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank my genial friend from Nebraska for his inquiries.

Mr. President, as I said the present 26 days of leave is excessive, because it is not measured by calendar days but by work days. It amounts therefore to 5⅕ weeks. It should be lowered in normal times, but our manpower needs to maintain adequate defense make it especially imperative that we make this change immediately.

The leave provision also increases the postal workers from 15 to 20 days. In the future, the national manpower situation will force postal workers to work harder and I believe it worth while to give them a month's vacation. Leave provisions should be equalized anyway within the Government service.

CONGRESS WOULD DECIDE WHERE TO CUT WHILE ALLOWING ADMINISTRATIVE FLEXIBILITY

The reduction provided by paragraphs (a) and (b) of my amendment are made while providing two safeguards. First. The areas where the rereductions are to be made are determined by Congress. Thus Congress determines where the reductions are to be made. It does not merely turn the problem over to the administrative agencies. Second. Flexibility to allow efficient administration is allowed. I do not assert that this is any final answer. Reducing expenditures should be carried out selectively item by item.

That is what I have been trying to do without much success, but to the best of my ability, during the past two weary weeks. But I assert that this amendment is preferable to an across-the-board percentage cut, and that, if it is a meat ax, it is a sharp meat ax wielded with care.

EXEMPTIONS

The exemptions provided are the obvious ones. They are similar to those provided for in the Bridges-Byrd amendment with a few important exceptions. Foreign aid, which is, in my judgment, a defense expenditure, is exempt. The Post Office is only exempt in its expenditures for railroad transportation of the mail. The Post Office is included except for railway mail transportation. I shall, however, if others of my colleagues do not do so, offer a specific amendment on the question of railway mail transportation costs.

I would also exempt subsidies where the amounts paid are set by law. This will prevent agencies from making their reductions in subsidies and then coming back for deficiency appropriations. I would also exempt the Coast Guard, which is now an agency of war and national defense, and not merely an agency of domestic administration.

I have made no provisions for reducing loans. I am afraid that under the Bridges-Byrd amendment, a department might make its total 10 percent reduction by holding up 2 or 3 large loans such as those given by REA or the Farm Credit Administration. If this were done, no waste would be eliminated at all.

I would, however, urge that all loans be scrutinized very carefully and that only those which will be in the national interest be given.

The Thomas-Taber and Jensen amendments have been thoroughly discussed and I will not burden the Senate with further talk about them. They are both too inflexible and they would be administratively difficult.

In appealing to the Senate favorably to consider my amendment, I ask that Senators read the amendment. I have additional copies at my desk. I shall also be happy to talk to anyone who desires more information and will welcome all who care to join me in sponsoring it. Any Senator who wants to add his name to the amendment will be welcome.

In closing I will simply say that I have spent a great deal of time studying these appropriations, and while the surgeon's knife approach of carefully cutting individual items is best, I believe this amendment, which is a sharp meat ax wielded with care is preferable to a blunt meat ax of an across-the-board percentage cut.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment offered by myself, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] be printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered printed as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken on pages 444, 445, and 446 by the committee amendment, insert the following:

"CHAPTER X–A—GENERAL REDUCTION IN APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 1001. Reductions in appropriations contained in this act are hereby made in the sum of $1,000,000,000. Such reductions shall be made in the following manner:

"(a) Funds appropriated in this act for supplies and materials, for lands and structures, and for Federal aid postwar highways shall be reduced by $500,000,000: Provided, That the Director of the Bureau of the Budget is empowered to make such reductions among the departments and agencies in the executive branch of the Government in such a manner as to provide for the most efficient use of the Nation's manpower and resources consistent with prevailing needs for an adequate national defense and a sound national economy.

"(b) Funds appropriated in this act for personal services, travel, transportation of things, communications services, rents and utilities, printing and reproduction, other contractual services, and equipment shall be reduced by $500,000,000 which reduction shall be made among the departments and agencies in the executive branch of the Government on a pro rata basis: Provided, That reductions in personnel shall, where practicable, be made by eliminating a total of 5 percent of the personnel provided for in the President's budget and the filling of a total of not more than one-half of all vacancies which occur by reason of death, resignation, or otherwise: Provided further, That the reductions provided for in this subsection among the departments shall be made on a department-wide basis and the secretaries of the departments are empowered, by means of transfers and adjustments, to keep the agencies within their respective departments at a maximum of efficiency: Provided further, That the Director of the Bureau of the Budget is empowered, by means of transfers and adjustments to administer the reductions provided for in this subsection among the nondepartmental and independent agencies in such a manner as to provide for a maximum of efficiency: Provided further, That hereafter, the amount of annual leave for Government employees, including employees of the postal service, shall be at the rate of 20 days per year and the amount of sick leave shall be at the rate of 12 days per year for classified and wage-board employees (except that no annual leave nor sick leave shall be granted to any Government employee who has not been in continuous Government service for at least one calendar year).

"SEC. 1002. The reductions provided for in this chapter shall not apply to the following (except that the annual- and sick-leave provisos shall apply to all classified and wage-board employees and postal workers).

"(a) Chapter X, chapter X–B and the amount appropriated to the General Services Administration for carrying out the provisions of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stockpiling Act of July 23, 1946;

"(b) Appropriations in title I of chapter VIII for the Executive Office of the President under the headlines "Compensation of the President," "The White House Office," "Emergency Fund for the President," and "Executive Mansion and Grounds."

"(c) Appropriations for the atomic-energy program;

"(d) Trust funds;

"(e) Funds of Government corporations excluding those made available in this act (1) for administrative expenses and (2) by appropriation from the general fund of the Treasury;

"(f) Amounts (other than under the Veterans' Administration) for furnishing medical and hospital services and domiciliary care, excluding (1) administrative expenses not directly connected with the operation of a specific hospital, dispensary, or clinic, and (2) expenses for employee health service programs;

"(g) Amounts provided in this act for payment of obligations incurred under prior appropriations or authorizations, and obligated balances of reappropriations;

"(h) Appropriations of, or measured by, receipts;

"(i) Amounts appropriated by this act for the operation of law-enforcement agencies, including the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Bureau of Customs, Immigration and Naturalization Services, and the Secret Service; or for the payment of compensation and expenses of agents and auditors of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and such other officers and employees of other agencies whose duties primarily pertain to intelligence operations (including funds transferred pursuant to section 6 (a) of the act of June 20, 1949; 63 Stat. 211), or to the investigation, apprehension, prosecution, or detention of persons suspected or convicted of offenses against the criminal laws of the United States;

"(j) Amounts provided for any program of the Veterans' Administration, excluding (1) administrative expenses not directly connected with the operation of a specific hospital, dispensary, clinic, or facility, and (2) expenses for employee health service programs;

"(k) Grants (other than those for Federal-aid postwar highways), subsidies, and contributions where amounts are determined by laws;

"(l) Amounts provided to make payment of or contributions toward pensions, retirement and disability annuities and benefits, employee's death or injury benefits, or other items of a similar nature;

"(m) Appropriations for refunds, awards, and indemnities.

"(n) Appropriations for the Coast Guard, and

"(o) The amount appropriated to the Post Office Department for railroad transportation of the mail."

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I move to insert in lieu of the matter stricken by the committee amendment on pages 444, 445, and 446, an amendment which I have sent to the desk, which I now ask to have read and made the order of business.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry first, please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. Is unanimous consent required to have the amendment made the pending business in view of the fact that the amendment runs into another chapter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; it would be out of order to consider the amendment in its present form, because it relates both to the chapter which we are just finishing and the following chapter, which has not been stated and is not before the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes. I have no objection to the amendment being printed and to have it lie on the table to be offered at the proper time.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The proper time will come in just about a fraction of a second.

Mr. WHERRY. I make the point of order, Mr. President, that the amendment is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment would not be in order as a portion of it relates to the next chapter, which is not now before the Senate.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield for a question.

Mr. KEM. I should like to associate myself with what the Senator from Illinois has stated about the necessity of reducing the nonmilitary expenses of the Government. I have voted for most, if not all, of the selective amendments proposed by him. In my opinion, the Senator from Illinois has performed a fine public service in his effort to make a selective reduction in the appropriation bill. I think he has some qualms about the results to some of his colleagues of what he has done, but I wish to say that, in my judgment, the way in which he has used the scalpel has been so skillful that it has left no scars. I think there can be no doubt about that. So I hope he will continue his efforts. I believe that time will show the great necessity for the Congress to do what the junior Senator from Illinois is seeking to have done.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have the floor; and in order that the Senator may propound a parliamentary inquiry, I have to yield first.

Mr. President, no chapter of the appropriations bill is now before the Senate at this time, I believe. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate pass over chapter X–A and proceed to the consideration of chapter X–B.

I shall be glad to yield now to the Senator from Illinois for a question.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, let me inquire why the Senator wishes to pass over chapter X–A, which logically would come before the Senate at this time.

Mr. WHERRY. I am merely asking that it be passed over temporarily.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Would it not be well to consider chapter X–A now?

Mr. WHERRY. The reason why I think the subject matter of chapter X–A or the subject matter the Senator from Illinois, himself, has been discussing should properly be taken up by us at the end of the bill is that before an amendment such as the Bridges-Byrd amendment or the so-called Douglas amendment is considered by the Senate it seems to me the Senate should proceed to consider the foreign-aid section of the bill, and should see whether a cut is to be made in that section of the bill. Then we can consider as the last chapter, the one to which, really, either the so-called Douglas amendment or the Bridges-Byrd amendment would apply.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, the foreign-aid section of the bill can be dealt with by means of amendments offered either to chapter X–A or chapter X–B.

I may say that I am very much pleased with what the Senator from Missouri has said. Unless I am abusing his compliments, I wish to say that I think the amendment should not be known solely as mine, but should be known as the Kem-Williams-Douglas amendment. Then we shall have awaiting our consideration both the Bridges-Byrd amendment and the Kem-Williams-Douglas amendment—thus indicating that a fine spirit of nonpartisanship urge for economy pervades this Chamber.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in that spirit, I ask unanimous consent that chapter X–A of the bill be passed over temporarily, for the reasons already stated.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I am not satisfied in my own mind that that would be the proper course. It pains me very much to have to object, but I am afraid I shall have to object.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I think my request is an absolutely constructive one. There are many Members of the Senate who would like to have all the chapters of the bill considered before the amendment now known, as the Senator from Illinois has said, as the Douglas-Kem amendment or before the Bridges-Byrd amendment is considered and adopted, if one of them is adopted, depending upon whichever one is considered by the Senate to have merit.

It seems to me that the proper time to consider them is after the bill has been amended in all other respects, at which time we shall have before us the bill in its entirety, and then we can consider whether to make an over-all cut.

Mr. President, if I am not able to obtain unanimous consent for the purpose I have requested, I shall move that the Senate temporarily pass over chapter X–A of the bill, and proceed to the consideration of the chapter X–B. I suppose that I must include in the motion a date, so as to provide that chapter X–A be taken up at a time certain.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Arizona, if he wishes to propose a modification of my request or make a motion.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I hope the distinguished junior Senator from Illinois will not object to the request that we temporarily pass over chapter X–A of the bill, because before we pass upon the amendments calling for over-all reductions, I believe we should know just what other provisions the bill is going to contain.

So, Mr. President, personally I think we should take up the ECA chapter of the bill, and then should proceed to consider the amendment which the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] has proposed, and should dispose of it. After having done that, and after we know what other provisions the bill is going to contain, we shall be better able to pass upon other amendments which may be offered.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have the floor. I yielded to the Senator, did I not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Illinois, if I may do so without prejudice to my right to the floor.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Illinois is certainly welcome.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I think I should state what is the real issue behind this parliamentary maneuvering: We are really jockeying to see whether the Bridges-Byrd amendment shall be acted on first or whether the Kem-Douglas amendment shall be acted on first.

I have no personal feeling about this matter, but I have going on within me a real mental and ethical struggle, which I wish to have resolved in the easiest manner possible.

I regard the Bridges-Byrd amendment as the worst possible way in which to cut the budget. However, the need for cutting the budget is so great that if all other methods fail, then, with certain qualifications, I shall be compelled to vote for the Bridges-Byrd amendment. But I do not wish to do so unless first we have exhausted every other alternative.

I am approaching the Bridges-Byrd amendment with the same alacrity that a cat exhibits when it is grabbed by the tail and is pulled backward across a thick rug, at which it claws energetically, doing its utmost to resist. In short, as each amendment is defeated, I find myself nearer and nearer the rapids and nearer and nearer the Bridges-Byrd amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Then, Mr. President——

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska permit me to continue?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the Senator for not imposing the guillotine upon me; I thank him for his characteristic courtesy. The point I want to make is this: I have tried selective cuts and have not been successful. However, I think a blunt, meat-ax approach like the Bridges-Byrd amendment is wrong. With reservations, however, I will be forced to vote for it if we fail in all other attempts to reduce expenditures. But before voting for it I would like to present my general amendment which calls for a larger cut, and which specifies the areas where the cuts are to be made. That is why I wish to have my amendment called up first. I think it is a much better way for Congress to make reductions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair state to the Senator from Illinois that if the unanimous-consent request is agreed to, the amendment of the Senator from Illinois will occupy exactly the same position which it will occupy otherwise.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Would it be the first to be acted upon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; the first to be acted upon——

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, that is the whole issue. If that is the case, I am satisfied.

Mr. WHERRY. Oh, no, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In order for the amendment of the Senator from Illinois to be first considered, the Senator from Illinois would have to be the first Senator to obtain the floor at that time.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, that is a very important point. So the question will be which Senator obtains the floor first.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have the floor, have I not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. If my motion is acted upon favorably, that will mean that the Senate will proceed to take up the ECA chapter of the bill. So the amendment of the Senator from Illinois will not be prejudiced in that case. In such event he will be just as well off at the time when he wishes to present his amendment as he is now. He does not have the floor now. If he agrees to the unanimous-consent request, then it will simply be a question of which amendment comes up first. If the Bridges-Byrd amendment is offered first, the Senator from Illinois can move to strike out the language of the amendment and insert the language of the Douglas-Kem amendment; or if the Douglas-Kem amendment is offered first, the Bridges-Byrd amendment could be offered as a substitute for it.

So, Mr. President, I hope the distinguished junior Senator from Illinois will not object to the requested unanimous-consent agreement, for he is always charitable and courteous, and wishes to go along in a good bipartisan spirit.

However, the motion already has been made to postpone until Wednesday of next week, for final consideration, chapter X–A of the bill.

So far as the handling of the amendments is concerned, that will depend on which Senator obtains the floor and which amendment prevails, either the so-called Douglas-Kem amendment or the Bridges-Byrd amendment.

Mr. President, I have made the motion.

Now I shall be glad to yield for a question.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the acting majority leader. Let me say now that if I may obtain unanimous consent, I shall withdraw the motion.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I do not wish to be classified as associated with any jockeying in favor of one side or another side, so far as the amendments are concerned. I did not have that in mind. I supported the course suggested by the Senator from Nebraska because I thought it was the most orderly way to proceed.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. McFARLAND. Although I favor temporarily laying aside chapter X, I certainly would resist a motion to take it up at a definite time. I do not think that would be the proper procedure.

I think we should lay it aside temorarily, and then proceed.

Of course, the distinguished junior Senator from Illinois is just about as quick on the jump as is the minority leader——

Mr. WHERRY. He is better, Mr. President. [Laughter.]

Mr. McFARLAND. In other words, the Senator from Illinois should be able to obtain the floor.

So I hope the Senator from Illinois will agree to the request to temporarily lay aside this chapter of the bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I wish to be very obliging. I have a very cooperative mood at all times, and particularly this afternoon.

If we can reach a unanimous-consent agreement that when we take up chapter X–A of the bill, my amendment will be the first order of business, I shall be very glad, indeed, to agree to the requested unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. President, I believe I have the floor now——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have the floor; I yielded for a question or, if there was no objection, for a comment. Do I not have the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I wish to be fair——

Mr. DOUGLAS. I wish to be fair to the Senator.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, why do not both Senators be fair to me, and yield to me?

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to yield once again to the junior Senator from Illinois, providing I do not prejudice my rights to the floor. I ask unanimous consent that I may do so.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. LANGER. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from Washington for a question.

Mr. MAGNUSON. As the Senator knows, there are two very important amendments pending.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. MAGNUSON. As to those amendments, it was generally understood we would finish the committee amendments and would then consider the two amendments because they are in the nature of new matter. They are probably the two most important amendments, and I was wondering whether, under this arrangement, we would go on with the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Oh, certainly.

Mr. MAGNUSON. And finish the committee amendments?

Mr. WHERRY. My motion is to temporarily pass over chapter X–A, and I feel that the majority leader should then bring up the so-called Douglas-Kem amendment, at the conclusion of the bill, for the reasons I have already stated—that if cuts are made in the ECA items, it will then be necessary to adjust the so-called over-all cut amendment, whichever one prevails.

Mr. MAGNUSON. It makes a difference.

Mr. WHERRY. The only time that could be done would be following the conclusion of the bill, at which time each and every Senator will have his right to the floor. I have to make a motion, however, to postpone it to a day certain. I did so Wednesday. I should like to modify that motion to, say, Monday, and when Monday comes, if we are not ready for it, we shall have to modify it, I presume, and extend it for a longer period. I do not want to delay passage of the pending bill, but the motion necessitates a day certain. I shall make the motion on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator first want to let the Chair put the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Illinois objected to it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I desire to be thoroughly obliging, thoroughly cooperative in all respects on these matters, and I am willing to withdraw my objection.

Mr. WHERRY. That is fine.

Mr. DOUGLAS. But I hope that the Chair or whoever may be occupying the chair, will cast his glance all around the Chamber when it comes time to recognize Senators, when this matter comes up.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I withdraw the motion I made, and I thank the Senator from Illinois for his cooperation. But I do not want the glancing part of the argument to prevail upon the occupant of the chair when the time comes to consider chapter X–A.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I merely said I hoped the eyes of the Presiding Officer would describe a semicircle—an arc, so to speak, and that he would not ignore the junior Senator from Illinois when the proper time came.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Chapter X–A will be passed over.

CONTROL OF ANCHORAGE AND MOVEMENT OF FOREIGN-FLAG VESSELS IN UNITED STATES WATERS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3859) to authorize the President to control the anchorage and movement of foreign-flag vessels in waters of the United States when the national security of the United States is endangered, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 1 of title II of the act of June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 217; U. S. C., title 50, sec. 191), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Whenever the President finds that the security of the United States is endangered by reason of actual or threatened war, or invasion, or insurrection, or subversive activity, or of disturbances or threatened disturbances of the international relations of the United States, the President is authorized to institute such measures and issue such rules and regulations—

"(a) to govern the anchorage and movement of any foreign-flag vessels in the territorial waters of the United States, to inspect such vessels at any time, to place guards thereon, and, if necessary in his opinion in order to secure such vessels from damage or injury, or to prevent damage or injury to any harbor or waters of the United States, or to secure the observance of rights and obligations of the United States, may take for such purposes full possession and control of such vessels and remove therefrom the officers and crew thereof, and all other persons not especially authorized by him to go or remain on board thereof;

"(b) to safeguard against destruction, loss, or injury from sabotage or other subversive acts, accidents, or other causes of similar nature, vessels, harbors, ports, and waterfront facilities in the United States, the Canal Zone, and all territory and water, continental or insular, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

Any appropriation available to any of the executive departments shall be available to carry out the provisions of this title."

SEC. 2. Section 4 of title II of the act of June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 220; U. S. C., title 50, sec. 194), is amended to read as follows:

"The President may employ such departments, agencies, officers, or instrumentalities of the United States as he may deem necessary to carry out the purpose of this title."

SEC. 3. Section 2 of title II of the act of June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 220; U. S. C., title 50, sec. 192), as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsection:

"(a) If any other person knowingly fails to comply with any regulation or rule issued or order given under the provisions of this title, or knowingly obstructs or interferes with the exercise of any power conferred by this title, he shall be punished by imprisonment for one more than 10 years and may, at the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $10,000."

SEC. 4. The provisions of this act shall expire on such date as may be specified by concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I wonder whether I might impose upon the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee and the minority and majority leaders long enough for a brief statement.

Last Friday we passed a piece of highly emergent legislation pertaining to waterfront security of the United States. The bill went to the House, and the House has passed it with two minor clarifying amendments. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to consideration of the bill (S. 3859) and I move that the Senate agree to the House amendments.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am not going to object to the unanimous-consent request, because I have already talked to the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], about this matter.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Let us take action on the House amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is not required. The House action is laid before the Senate as a matter of right.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, is this a conference report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is an amendment of the House transmitted by message. The question is on agreeing to the House amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, that is what I wanted to have explained. I wanted to know what the House amendment was.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I shall explain the House amendment. The House has added two clarifying amendments. The only one of any importance is the following on page 1:

Whenever the President finds that the security of the United States is endangered by reason of actual or threatened war, or invasion, or insurrection, or subversive activity, or of disturbances or threatened disturbances of the international relations of the United States, the President is authorized to institute such measures and issue such rules and regulations—

In other words, the President is then authorized to do certain things for the protection of the water front. The House added "or insurrection, or subversive activity." I think it makes the bill much stronger.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, to the bill as passed by the Senate, the House has made this additional amendment, which I think is a good one.

Mr. MAGNUSON. It makes the bill stronger.

Mr. WHERRY. For that reason, I hope the House amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I merely want to say as a matter of information for the RECORD that I do not know whether the President will exercise this authority. I understand that if the bill is passed by the Senate today, as I am sure it will be, the President will sign the bill immediately, and that will give him authority to proceed at once on our water fronts. This is not a national emergency measure; it is only a limited emergency measure to take care of the water front security of the Nation. It is to prevent the entry into our ports of foreign-flag ships without notice either to the Coast Guard or the FBI, and enable them to make a search of the ships before they reach our territorial waters, in case they might have in their holds something which might be destructive.

It also has this purpose, which I think is a good one: As I have said before, the last stronghold of subversive activity in this country, in my opinion, or at least the last concentrated stronghold, has been around our water fronts. It would be impossible for destruction to come to any great port of the United States, of which there are many, as the result of a ship coming into port with an atomic bomb or with biological or other destructive agency, without some liaison ashore. This would give authority to the President to instruct the FBI, in cooperation with the Coast Guard, the Navy, or any other appropriate governmental agency, to go to our water fronts and pick out people who might be subversives or security risks to this country. I think it goes a long way toward taking care of the domestic situation, as related to this subject, particularly in view of the large amount of talk we have had in the Senate within the past few days about Communists. The bill also protects that last loophole which is left, by which there might be some actual destruction along the shores of the United States. It also includes the Territories of the United States. I am thinking in particular of the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, into whose ports many foreign-flag ships enter and from which they leave. I am sure that the Senate and House, in acting with due speed on this measure, have done a really fine job in adding to the security of America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] to the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

THE KOREAN WAR MADE A POLITICAL ISSUE

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I have just obtained a copy of the Washington Evening Star of today. I was horrified to find on page 1 the following headlines: "Democratic pamphlet makes Korean war major election issue—Kirwan group charges GOP obstructionism hastened Red aggression."

I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that across page 1 of the Evening Star is the screaming headline, "Reds pressing all-out attack in Korea." Under that headline is another headline, "Decisive battle on, MacArthur aide declares." Over the two adjacent columns on page 1 is the headline, "100,000-man draft expected to mean 505 quota for District of Columbia."

Next to that, Mr. President, it says, "News on Korea still expected to get worse."

So, Mr. President, at the very time thousands and thousands of our boys are over there dying or getting wounded, we find the Democratic National Committee issuing a pamphlet attacking the Republican Party. Mr. President, to my mind, the issuing of this pamphlet is so contemptible, so out of place in a country such as ours, in time of danger and crisis, that I want to read the article to show what men will stoop to in politics at the very time when our boys are in Korea fighting for their very lives.

The article is by Gould Lincoln, one of our best newspapermen, and it reads as follows:

The Korean war today was thrust officially into the coming congressional campaign as a major issue.

The Democratic congressional committee, headed by Representative KIRWAN, of Ohio, put out a 17-page memorandum, entitled "Background Information on Korea," to be used by Democratic candidates for the House. In it the committee charged the Red attack on southern Korea had been hastened by Republican opposition to the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949 and to the Economic Assistance for Korea Act of 1949. The memorandum is being placed in the hands of each Democratic candidate.

Chairman KIRWAN said the committee was forced into taking this action by attacks on President Truman by Republicans in Congress and by the Republican National Committee, in connection with the Korean war.

I invite attention to the fact, Mr. President, that the vote supporting the President of the United States when we got into trouble in the Korean matter was unanimous on this side. I continue reading from the article:

PARTISAN SPEECHES CHARGED

"It has been the hope of responsible Democratic leaders," Mr. KIRWAN said, "that the Korean war and the emergency it has brought in the affairs of our Government would not be approached within the framework of partisan politics. However, Republican leaders in both Houses have made partisan speeches on the Korean war, in some cases even going so far as to blame the administration for the results of their own obstruction; and the Republican National Committee has issued a bitter partisan attack on our President in connection with the Korean war, notable chiefly in that it follows the line of the Daily Worker, in some instances word for word."

The background information memorandum asserts that, since the close of World War II, a strong isolationist bloc in Congress has refused to accept the sound principle that political partisanship should stop at the water's edge. It charges this has done harm to international cooperation.

"The Democratic Party adheres to the principles of a bipartisan foreign policy," the memorandum continues, "and although the Democratic Party is justly proud of its record on the Korean aid bills, we do not wish to negate the bipartisan principle by starting a political fight over Korea. On the other hand, it is important to keep the record straight, if our party is subjected to isolationist attack because of Korea."

RECORD, SINCE 1943

The record of the United States policy toward Korea since 1943 is set down. It begins when at Cairo, when the postwar independence of Korea was guaranteed by the United States, Britain, and China. At Potsdam, in 1945, Russia joined in this guaranty. The memorandum recites the manner in which the United States and Russia joined in liberating Korea from Japanese rulers, and continues:

"The present division of Korea along the thirty-eighth parallel was never intended by the United States; and after Japanese forces had been disarmed, this country sought to restore the unity of Korea," but was blocked by Russia's refusal. This opposition by Russia has been responsible for the continued division of the country up to the present, the statement says. It recites, too, the fact that the Soviet Government had organized a North Korean Army and equipped it with Russian material.

In detail the millions of dollars contributed by this country for Korean aid is set forth in the memorandum—$356,000,000 for economic assistance for the years 1946 through 1949. Military assistance to Korea was included in the Mutual Defense Act of 1949, when that country shared $27,640,000 with Iran and the Philippines.

GOP OPPOSITION CITED

This Mutual Defense Act was opposed, the memorandum said, by many Republicans, who supported crippling amendments, and voted against its passage.

President Truman proposed, it adds, a little ECA for Korea in 1949, and that, too, was fought by Republicans. The bill for this purpose was defeated in the House by a vote of 192 to 191, although a Korean aid measure subsequently was passed.

The memorandum insists, however, that the first vote in the House was a great blow to South Korea and that "the Communists logically concluded that, if the United States was so unwilling to grant aid to democratic Korea with money, it certainly would never provide aid with men."

I invite attention again to the fact, Mr. President, that in the House it was defeated by a vote of 192 to 191. The article continues as follows:

PARTIES SPLIT ON VOTE

It points out that Republican opponents of the program said "that any aid to the Democratic Government of South Korea was 'pouring money down a rat hole,'" and that the Communist radio so quoted them.

The first vote in the House on the Korean economic aid bill showed 130 Republicans and 61 Democrats voting against, and 21 Republicans and 170 Democrats voting for it. The sole American Labor Party vote was cast against the bill, by Representative MARCANTONIO, of New York, who, the memorandum says, follows the Communist line.

In other words, Mr. President, at this very crucial time, we find the Democrats sending out such a pamphlet squarely dividing the House by a vote of 192 to 191, and creating an untold amount of trouble. I continue reading:

The Democrats' memorandum brought quick response from the Republicans.

Representative HALL, of New York, chairman of the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee, declared in a statement:

"It will take a lot more than 18 pages of distortion and misrepresentation by the Democratic Congressional Committee to convince the American people that Mr. Truman, Mr. Acheson, and the Democratic Party could condone Communist conquest of Asia for five long years and then cancel out that colossal blunder by sending American soldiers unprepared into Korea."

RED HERRINGS NOT EXHAUSTED

"No amount of alibiing and lint-picking will cause the American people to forget that it has been the Republicans both in and out of Congress who have opposed this policy."

The Republican National Committee said in a separate statement:

"The Democrats haven't exhausted their supply of red herrings. The latest one won't deceive the people, who know that the Republican Party has led the fight against Communists at home as well as abroad. Look at the record."

A top Republican strategist in the House, asking not to be identified by name, made clear that Republicans won't hesitate to use Mr. KIRWAN's weapon in local political campaigns against the 61 Democrats who voted against the Korean measure.

"If it's good enough to use against Republicans," he said, "it ought to be good enough to use against Democrats."

Mr. President, at this very crucial time we find a fight is on between Republicans and Democrats, started by the Democrats, who are looking for votes to get into Congress, and as a result, they create a great deal of misery and strife among the people of this country, whose sons in the last analysis must do the fighting. While I am on the subject, Mr. President, and as a Republican, I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate a very important bill which I introduced. It was defeated by the people now in power, by the administration. It was Senate bill 761. I introduced it on February 3, 1949. I want every Senator to note this carefully. The bill provided for the admission into the United States of a few persons of the Korean race. It would have made them racially eligible for naturalization. When I introduced the bill, and at various other times, I said that although we may have nations sitting around one table, as in the United Nations, where we may find India, China, Pakistan, and other countries, we say to them, "Our people can go to your countries, but you cannot come to ours."

Mr. President, I remember the fight we had here only 5 years ago, to admit perhaps no more than 3,500 West Indians, some of whom had lived in this country since 1917 and whose sons had fought in our Armed Forces. I remember how hard we had to fight to get a law through Congress to give them the opportunity of becoming naturalized. Up to that time those men and women, who had lived here, could not even get a driver's license to drive an automobile, get married, own land, or testify in court. In 1924, the Supreme Court, in a decision written by Justice Sutherland, said that they were neither Caucasian nor Negroid, and they were absolutely ineligible to become citizens of the United States. After some 3 years of good hard work we finally got the law through Congress. Over in the House the fight was led by Congressman CELLER, a Democrat from New York, and Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce, a Republican. I led the fight in the Senate. Mr. President, that was only a beginning. Anyone who has read the book The Gentlemen Talk of Peace, written by William Ziff, must have known how very important it was a concession of some kind should be made so that people living in Asia would have a chance to receive some kind of recognition—even token recognition—by being allowed to come over to this country under our naturalization and immigration laws.

When I introduced the bill to provide for admission into the United States of persons of the Korean race, I received some letters. I have one letter in my hand, dated March 5, 1949, on the stationery of the Korean Immigration and Naturalization Committee, Post Office Box 1706, Washington, D. C. I shall ask unanimous consent to introduce the letter in evidence, because it shows that the full committee of Koreans wanted the measure passed. The letter reads:

KOREAN IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION COMMITTEE,
Washington, D. C., March 5, 1949.

Senator WILLIAM LANGER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LANGER: On March 1, 1949, by a majority vote the House passed H. R. 199 (Judd bill) and it is now in the Senate. No doubt it will reach the Senate subcommittee, of which Senator PAT MCCARRAN is chairman.

Our committee is of the opinion that your past interest for Korea and her people will bear rich fruit when the Judd bill comes to the Senate Judiciary Committee and the floor of the Senate. And we further believe the recent passage of the Judd bill was due to serious considerations given by the Members of the United States Congresses. Our first Korean bill was introduced by Delegate JOSEPH R. FARRINGTON from Hawaii on June 1944. In all there were 12 Korean immigration and naturalization bills in various Congresses including the 6, 3 each in the Senate and House, introduced in the present Eighty-first Congress. Because of such introductions heretofore, Members of Congress felt the urgent need of repealing and amending some of the present unpleasant features in the immigration and naturalization laws. Therefore, our committee knows that your efforts were not in vain.

Our committee urges upon you to continue your interest for Korea by supporting the Judd bill in the Senate subcommittee and in the Senate itself. We wish to go on record as such and hope you will continue to enjoy good health and with best regards.

Very sincerely yours,
WALTER JHUNG.

In a moment I shall show what became of that bill. I want to discuss first what happened to the bill that I introduced. I introduced a bill on February 3, 1949. On February 6 I received the following letter from the Korean Immigration and Naturalization Committee dated March 22, 1949:

DEAR SENATOR LANGER: We wish to sincerely thank you for introducing your Senate bill 761 on February 3, 1949, in behalf of our committee. Koreans everywhere will watch your bill with the greatest of anxieties.

Without any doubt, successful legislation of your bill as well as the ones now under consideration in the House Judiciary Committee will have tremendous moral uplifting of the people in Korea. It will act as a shock absorber for the rough-going on the highway to full democracy in Korea. That highway is now filled with Communists' propaganda and falsifications.

As soon as we have finished with our new brief on Korea we will present to you a copy along with other pertinent materials on that country and its people.

Thanking you again, we are,
Respectfully yours,
WALTER JHUNG.

On March 22, 6 weeks after I introduced the bill, I got a letter from the Korean National Association from Honolulu, T. H., dated March 22, 1949. In Honolulu they were watching what was happening to the bill I had introduced in behalf of these people. On March 22 they wrote:

DEAR SIR: It is with inexpressible gratitude that we, the officers of the Korean National Association, an Hawaiian eleemosynary corporation, take this means to convey our heartfelt appreciation for your efforts and action by the introduction of your S. 761 to make available unto the thousands of Koreans residing upon American soil the great privilege of becoming American citizens

Although these persons had been living in Hawaii for many years, and their sons had fought in the war, they were held to be ineligible for citizenship in the United States. Mind you, that was at the very time when we sat in the United Nations, but race after race of brown people are still being barred by us. We ask for their cooperation. We send our boys to fight for them, but at the same time we say, "Although you may be good enough to fight for, not one of you can be naturalized as a United States citizen."

What hypocrisy, Mr. President. The letter proceeds:

We are certain that the opening of the door of citizenship to us Koreans will result in not only a further strengthening of the close bond between the new Korean Government and the United States of America but also in the creation of new American citizens who will be a credit and service to your great Government.

Thank you very kindly.

Sincerely yours,
SONG SOON SUR,
President.
WILLIAM K. LEE,
Secretary.

This was from the Korean National Association, with headquarters at Honolulu.

Not only that, Mr. President, but there is here in Washington an organization which is interested in Korea, and their officials came to see me.

My bill was postponed indefinitely by the full committee on the 16th day of May, and I want the record to be indelibly clear that on every committee in the Senate about which I know anything a majority were Democrats. So even as late as May 16, 1949, the committee refused to report out this measure I had introduced. They refused to have anything to do with these Koreans, these people for whom our American youth are now fighting, and in whom they are trying to inculcate the principles of liberty.

Mr. President, I wish to call to the attention of the Senate a great speech made on Tuesday last on the floor of the House of Representatives by Hon. DEWEY SHORT. It was at a time when we had passed, by suspending the rule at the request of the distinguished senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], a bill providing for an extension of 1 year of the terms of those who had previously enlisted in the Army, Navy, and Air Force.

Mr. SHORT, speaking on Tuesday, said this:

Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to speak a word on this particular measure because I am wholeheartedly in favor of it, as I am the next bill we will consider to lift the ceilings on the personnel of our armed services, and I think practically every Member of this body on both sides of the aisle is. It is a very simple measure, similar to the one we passed, both at the outbreak of World War I and at the outbreak of World War II.

Realizing that there will be approximately 300,000 members of our armed services—the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Air Force—whose enlistments will expire during the next calendar year, our committee, and I am sure the Congress, are thoroughly convinced, that it is imperative and inescapable that we extend the enlistments for the next 12 months.

Again, Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that the vote to extend those enlistments was unanimous. Every Republican who was present voted for the bill, and it comes with ill grace from the National Democratic Congressional Committee to issue such a scurrilous pamphlet attacking the Republican Party, such as that which has been issued.

In ordinary peacetimes over 50 percent of those whose enlistments expire would reenlist. They are trained personnel. They are experienced personnel. It is not easy—indeed, it is next to impossible—to supplant them overnight with raw, green recruits. Many of them are now fighting in distant parts of the world, or are stationed for security reasons at different posts all over the globe, and it is exceedingly difficult for us to bring back these men, as their enlistments expire from day to day and week to week and month to month, when a war is raging. So the whole purpose of the bill, S. 3937, a bill to authorize the President to extend the enlistments in the Armed Forces of the United States, is to hold the men who are now in the various branches of the armed services long enough until replacements can be obtained by enlistment, by call of Reserves and the National Guard, or by the draft, and properly trained to take their place.

Mr. President, some Senators criticized me when I introduced a bill a little while ago, shortly before this Korean situation became serious. As I remember now, it was on Wednesday, after the President had ordered the troops to go over to Korea on Monday. I introduced a bill providing that farm boys should not be taken right away. One of the great isolationist papers attacked not only me, but attacked the State of North Dakota.

How well do I remember, Mr. President, how in World War II almost overnight the Government took boys who were engaged in raising crops, took them away almost without notice, took them before the draft boards were even officially organized. Some of them had herds of cattle, some of them had hundreds and hundreds of acres of wheat and other grains which they could not harvest because they were taken away. Look at the newspapers of those days for the proof.

I went to the heads of the draft boards at that time and said that those boys should be given time to get their affairs in order. Later General Hershey and I gave a joint radio address to the farmers of the country.

This year all over the great Northwest the spring was 5 or 6 weeks late. The result is the crops are going to be 5 or 6 weeks late in maturing and it will be necessary to have the boys out there longer this year than at the time World War II broke out.

For this reason I promptly served notice, by the bill I introduced, and it had a good effect, in that the draft boards, through those in authority in taking the farm boys away from home, are going to take into consideration the fact that the crop is 5 or 6 weeks late.

In view of the fact that those in authority have now considered that matter so carefully, and the further fact that the bill has accomplished its purpose, and because the situation in Korea is 100 times worse, at least 100 times worse, than it was at the time the bill was introduced just a few short days ago, I am withdrawing it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). Does the Senator wish to postpone indefinitely the bill in question?

Mr. LANGER. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator have the number of the bill?

Mr. LANGER. I will give it to the Chair later.

I wish to continue reading the statement of Representative SHORT:

> Now that is all the bill provides for. It is bad policy for the Government to break a contract with any of its citizens. It is tough for a 30-year-old man, fighting in the rice paddies of Korea, his wife and a couple of kids in Japan or back home in the States, to be held on at the expiration of his 3- or 4-year service, particularly when there are some unmarried individuals between the ages of 26 and 30 back home who perhaps are not contributing their full share in this crisis, to the defense of the Nation.
> But, ladies and gentlemen, liberty is the first casualty of war. Truth is usually next.

Mr. President, I say the truth usually is the next casualty. That is one reason why I condemn the pamphlet issued by the National Democratic Congressional Committee, issued in the very midst of what may turn out to be one of the most trying periods through which our country has ever passed. Yet, between now and election we are going to see the pamphlet handed out all over the country in an effort by the Democrats to obtain a few more votes for their candidates.

Mr. President, I say it is contemptible, and it ought to lose votes for the Democrats wherever they circulate that kind of scurrilous pamphlet.

> When you engage in an armed conflict, freedom is gone. All of us are going to be required to do things we do not want to do. We are going to have our activities curbed. There will be allocations, priorities, rationing, and certain controls, no doubt, if the flames touched off in Korea engulf the world. Painful as that is, it is inescapable. You cannot fight a painless war. It is just impossible.
> I want to say one or two things in a general way, aside from this bill, particularly since our distinguished and able chairman took considerable time to talk about the over-all picture.
> In order to win a modern, mechanized war, the victor must possess at least three materials. He has to have iron and steel, rubber, and oil. Soviet Russia has secured a lot of iron and steel and industry in Manchuria, a territory twice as large as the State of Texas, which is the industrial heart of all Asia.

Manchuria was turned over to the enemy by the Democrats, Mr. President, by a Democratic administration, which now has the gall, in the midst of the war, to issue that kind of a pamphlet against the Republicans, the majority of whom at least, under the leadership of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] certainly have cooperated with them.

I continue to read:

> And she would not have that steel if the Chinese, after being promised at the Cairo Conference that Manchuria would be returned to them at the end of the war, had not been sold down the river, and Manchuria turned over to Soviet Russia.

Who sold them down the river? Why a Democratic administration, Mr. President. The same kind of an administration which is now circulating this scurrilous pamphlet in time of war.

> Who is responsible for that action? Russia has got to have not only iron and steel in Manchuria and the rich metals and minerals of China, that have gone completely under. Everyone knows China is the head, the heart, the bowels, and legs of Asia; and because of the recent weak, indecisive, vacillating, contradictory foreign policy, all China has been lost to Red communism. Who is responsible for that? What Members of the House and Senate have stood and pled week after week, month after month, for a strong far eastern foreign policy? The Republicans, as the record will show. Now that China has gone under, after being told that we should keep hands off until the dust settled; after being told by the Secretary of Defense that it was not our responsibility to defend Korea, or any other spot in the Orient; and after being told by the Secretary of State we will have nothing to do with the defense of Formosa; after the Secretary of Defense told us repeatedly, before our committee and in public addresses during the past 6 months, that if we were attacked at any place at 4 o'clock in the morning we would be ready to answer at 5 o'clock; after being repeatedly told by members of the administration that South Korea was capable of defending herself; after all of these miscalculations and misrepresentations, not only to the American people but to your Committee on Armed Services, we have now completely reversed our foreign policy in Asia, and we have decided to go into the one spot with its tough terrain, with its foul weather, the most difficult place on earth to pit our strength against the force of the ground armies of Soviet Russia, namely, Korea. Russia's strength always has been in her ground forces.
> Recently the President of the United States has repeatedly told the American people, at the commencement exercises at the University of Missouri in Columbia last month and at the dedication of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial in St. Louis the following day, that we are closer to peace than any time since the shooting stopped in 1945.
> At Korea, a little sort of finger, an appendix of the Asiatic Continent about the size of Illinois, 600 miles long, 135 miles wide, we go in to defend only the south half of it, and defend it with what? Who withdrew Lieutenant General Hodge and his 40,000 American troops from Korea south of the thirty-eighth parallel a year ago last month, in June 1949?
> The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES], the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON], and others here with me in 1946 were in Korea. We went up and down that arbitrary thirty-eighth parallel that has no military significance; there is not a mountain range, there is no river, there is nothing geographical about it; it is just a line that was blindly, arbitrarily, and stubbornly drawn so that the Japs north of the thirty-eighth parallel would surrender to the Russians, and the Japs south of the thirty-eighth parallel would surrender to the Americans. General Hodge, with his 40,000 troops, repatriated over 5,000,000 Japanese soldiers, not only from Korea but from Manchuria and China.
> When we returned from our trip in October 1946—

I want every Senator to listen carefully to these words of DEWEY SHORT, one of the outstanding men in the House of Representatives—

> we unanimously agreed that the moment we pulled out of Korea the Russians or the Communists would move in. That is what we told the Congress; that is what the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES] and I told the American people in a broadcast over a Washington radio, with Ernest K. Lindley acting as moderator.
> Oh, yes, Mr. Chairman, we are in for it; for the third time in our generation we are engaged in a bloody and devastating war. Of course, in 1916 an administration was elected to power because it kept us out of war; in 1940 another administration for the third time was returned to power because it promised again, and again, and again, that American boys would not have to fight and die on foreign soil; and now, today for the third time we are engaged in war, and Congress has not declared it.
> We are not requested or asked for counsel or advice; but we were told on a half sheet of paper when we were called down to the White House 4 weeks ago on Tuesday, I think it was 4 weeks ago today, that the Chief Executive, the Commander in Chief, had ordered naval and air support for the ground forces in Korea after we had withdrawn our own forces over a year ago. We cannot now debate the legality of constitutionality of the action of the President. The die is cast. The poor southern Koreans, most of them farmers—it is an agricultural section—with bamboo poles and spears trying to stop 50-ton Russian tanks.
> Oh, yes; I feel that there will be no peace in our time; there will be intermittent wars the rest of our days. The moment we squelch the war in Korea it will break out in Formosa, it will pop up in Iran; it is just like the measles, you do not know whether they are going to break out around your ankles or your eyes.

Mr. President, I wish to say that in introducing my bill to exempt from the draft the young men all over the Northwest, I did so because, as I have said before, I remember so well what happened in World War II, when this body debated time and time again, day after day, the question of whether the boys who were drafted should have a year's training before they were sent over the water, or whether they should have 8 months' training or 10 months' training. That question arose when it was discovered by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] that the son of one of his neighbors in Ohio had been killed after he had been in the service only 8 weeks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair inform the Senator from North Dakota that the number of the bill to which he has referred is S. 3880.

Without objection, the Committee on Armed Services will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 3880) to provide deferment from training and service under the Selective Service Act of persons engaged in raising agricultural food crops, and the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. LANGER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a book written by the great military expert for the New York Times, Hanson W. Baldwin. Mr. Baldwin received a Pulitzer prize for his reporting of World War II, and is today considered a leading authority on the politics and technology of modern warfare. He attended the second atom bomb test at Bikini, and has recently inspected guided missile and rocket-launching installations throughout the Nation. His last book, The Price of Power, an analysis of American security and international obligations, won the highest praise from both political and military sources. The New York Herald Tribune said that "it well exemplifies Mr. Baldwin's outstanding virtues of courage, intellectual toughness, and honesty." The Chattanooga Times called it "required reading for anyone interested in our Nation's future."

Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to what Mr. Baldwin has to say about the situation in Asia; at this time I refer to his book entitled Great Mistakes of the War, and I turn to page 77, where we find a subhead, "Appeasement in Asia."

Mr. President, I wish to call attention again and again to the fact that for all these years all of us have been under a Democratic administration, including the men who now have the audacity to issue this pamphlet against the Republican Party—a pamphlet which, I repeat, is one of the most out-of-place pamphlets which has ever been published in a long, long time in the midst of a war.

Mr. President, Mr. Baldwin, who received a Pulitzer prize for his reporting, and who is the military expert for the New York Times, in his book really discusses the record of the Democratic Party in dealing with Asia.

He says:

2. APPEASEMENT IN ASIA

Perhaps the saddest chapter in the long history of political futility which the war recorded was the Yalta Conference of February 1945. As former Secretary of War Stimson writes, "much of the policy of the United States toward Russia, from Tehran to Potsdam, was dominated by the eagerness of the Americans to secure a firm Russian commitment to enter the Pacific war." This eagerness was first manifest at Tehran when Russia's need for warm-water ports was discussed and Roosevelt suggested the establishment of Dairen in Manchuria as an international free port. It reached its crescendo at Yalta, where we attempted to pin down prior elusive Soviet promises to take up arms against Japan. The negotiations about future action against the Japanese were interspersed with discussions of the peace settlement and the German question in Europe, and their political implications were made secondary to the President's prime objective at Yalta—"the brave new world," the establishment of the basic framework of the United Nations.

For all these reasons—and because of a fundamental military as well as political misconception—Russia held the whip hand, and the United States representatives placed themselves in the amazing position of "giving away" territories which did not belong to us, and of undertaking to secure concessions which impaired the sovereignty of a friendly Allied state. The political misconception, so obvious now, should have been apparent then; it was not to our interest, or the interests of China or of the world, to make Russia a Pacific power; it was not to our interest to beg or barter for Russia's entry into the Pacific war.

Nor should military considerations have affected this political judgment. At the time of Yalta, Japan was already beaten—not by the atomic bomb, which had not yet been perfected, not by conventional bombing, then just starting, but by attrition and blockade. The home islands were severed from the Empire by our conquest of the Philippines and the Marianas, and the submarine and surface blockade already had brought the pinch of hunger and the stress of severe raw material shortages to Japan. Even before the first bomb was dropped by our B–29's on the Japanese home islands, the enemy aircraft industry was disrupted and on the decline; shortages due to the blockade and a chaotic program of decentralization, dispersion, and underground development, badly carried out, already had reduced severely the output of Japanese factories. The full seriousness of the Japanese plight was not then, of course, completely understood. Our military men were preoccupied and concerned with the fierceness of the Japanese defense; the tactical situation obscured the hopeless strategic position of Japan, and some of our commanders took, therefore, far too pessimistic a view. Mistakes in intelligence, or rather in evaluation, also contributed to an erroneous assessment of Japanese intentions and capabilities. We feared that even after the main Japanese islands had been conquered, the enemy resistance would continue on the continent of Asia with the much-vaunted Kwantung Manchurian Army as its core.

Yet, our intelligence officers in Washington and throughout the Pacific for months had been identifying units of the Kwantung Army and of its air support which had been transferred from that quiet area to various battle sectors.

By late 1944 it was—or should have been—apparent that what remained of the Kwantung Army was largely composed of green conscripts and second-rate troops, with virtually no air support, incapable of a prolonged campaign; it had been bled white to provide reinforcements for other fronts. We also confused Japanese capabilities with Japanese intentions. We believed the Japanese would resist to the last man, no matter how hopelessly beaten.

These beliefs, which were completely erroneous—

Mr. President, whose beliefs were erroneous? Those of the Democratic Party, which has just issued the scurrilous sheet to which I have referred. We provided them with money enough. Heaven knows, there were hundreds of millions of dollars available to them. But apparently, as this military expert says, the Democratic administration knew nothing of the results of that terrible situation which arose, which gave Russia a part of Manchuria and turned over to Russia the Kurile Islands and North Korea. I continue:

These beliefs, which were completely erroneous, influenced materially the politico-military approach made at Yalta. They were not held, at the time, by all our experts; but they were, unfortunately, the controlling opinions.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LANGER. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator recall that but 2 or 3 weeks ago on the floor of the Senate, when the Senate was discussing military assistance to Korea, it was brought out that last year the Senate voted an appropriation of $10,600,000 for a military mission to Korea, and that not one dime of it had been spent all last year, and that after the investigation was started the startling information was brought forth that $200 had been charged against the account and that the $200 was for the purpose of rehabilitating $30,000 worth of signal wire that was to be shipped to Korea, which has not even yet reached Korea? The $200 represents the complete history of what this administration spent in Korea during the last fiscal year. Does the Senator know that?

Mr. LANGER. I know it only too well. It is one of the great tragedies of our time. In my reading, Mr. President, I now want to skip over a little and come to another part of this book, written by the military expert for the New York Times, who received the Pulitzer prize, Hanson W. Baldwin. I want to indicate the division among those high in authority in the United States for the purpose of showing that while our boys were dying the men appointed under this Democratic administration could not even agree among themselves. At page 82, Mr. Baldwin says:

General Marshall was then convinced that an invasion of the Japanese main islands was essential, and he insisted that help from Russia on the mainland of Asia was necessary. Admiral King seemed to share this view. But there were divergences of opinion as to the necessity of this operation; Admiral William D. Leahy, who feared the cost in casualties of invasion, and who correctly assessed the crippling effect of the blockade on Japan, opposed the invasion. The compromise eventually reached—a sensible one—was to prepare for invasion, but in the meantime to utilize the blockade and air bombardment to the utmost to bring Japan to her knees.

These strategic differences—and a failure to appreciate fully the hopeless strategical position of Japan—colored the military thinking at Yalta and helped to lead to indefensible political arrangements.

There you have it, Mr. President. That is the kind of leadership our Government had at that time. I continue:

"Certainly," as the Washington Post has commented, "the Chiefs of Staff made a blunder to advise Roosevelt and Churchill at Yalta that Japan would last 18 months after VE-day. Our military men underrated Japan at the beginning of the war, then overrated it, and refused to see the patent fact, obvious to the Navy, that Japan was through even while the brass hats were meeting at Yalta."

Yet at Yalta—and even at the Potsdam Conference in July 1945, when Hitler lay dead and dishonored near the ruins of his bunker in Berlin and the Third Reich was broken and shattered—one month before the surrender of Japan, there were still many Americans who were interested primarily in getting a firm commitment from Russia to enter the Pacific war.

This mistaken policy stemmed in part from the basic political misconceptions outlined at the beginning of this book, in part from strategic misconceptions, some of them based on inadequate logistical planning. As General Deane points out in his book, our planners were obsessed with two ideas—to bring Russia into the Pacific war and to utilize Russian territory as bases for our war effort against Japan. Repeatedly, General Deane and other United States representatives had pressed Soviet leaders long before Yalta for permission to utilize Russian territory as air bases for our attacks on Japan. Yet the cart was put before the horse—we made diplomatic representations for this permission before we had estimated, logistically, the value of such bases to us.

The author then goes on to tell how utterly useless those bases would have been to us. I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of page 84, page 85, and page 86 be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Our attempts to get firm Soviet commitments about the war against Japan reached a preliminary crisis in October 1944, more than 4 months before Yalta, when Churchill and a British entourage visited Moscow. General Deane describes the resulting conferences which he attended as the principal American military representative. Stalin reiterated his intention, first announced to Cordell Hull at Moscow in October 1943, then more or less formalized at Tehran, of entering the Pacific war, said he needed 3 months after VE-day to stockpile supplies in Siberia, declared that the United States could have air bases and one naval base in the Far East; but added that "if the United States and Great Britain preferred to bring Japan to her knees without Russian participation, he was ready to agree." Furthermore, there was a little item of additional supplies that Russia would require to help her build up a 2 months' reserve in Siberia. All in all, Stalin said the Russians would need more than 1,000,000 tons of cargo, and they must be delivered by June 30, 1945, the deliveries to be in addition to those already being made under the fourth lend-lease protocol. In Moscow, in 1944, Stalin made many glowing promises, but, "despite these promises, the end result was that the Russians got their supplies and the United States got nothing except a belated and last-minute Russian attack against the Japanese."

As the Soviets stalled on their promises and we delivered supplies, the months drew on into the winter of 1944–45; and at Yalta, in February, President Roosevelt, pressed by the United States Chiefs of Staff, again took up the questions of bomber bases in Siberia and the date of Russian entry into the Pacific war. Stalin again agreed in principle, and set the date at 3 months after victory in Europe had been won. He said the United States could establish bases in the Komsomolsk-Nikolaevsk area and eventually in Kamchatka. But he got down in black and white his price: The Curzon line for the eastern border of Poland, the Kurile Islands and controlling economic and strategic concessions in Manchuria. (Stalin's Manchurian price for Russia's entry into the Pacific war had first been broached apparently with no grave objections on our part, at Tehran in December 1943, just a few days after Roosevelt, Churchill, and Chiang Kai-shek had agreed in the Cairo Declaration that Manchuria and Formosa should be restored to China.)

But it was not until the spring, when Germany was at her last gasp and Japan near the end, that, in the words of General Deane, "it was found that the net increase that would result from putting four groups of B–29's in the Amur River district would be 1.39 percent of the total bomb tonnage we could place on Japan without using Russian bases." This was convincing proof, adds Deane, "that the slight increase in our bombing effort and the advantage of an added direction of approach for our bomber formations were not at all commensurate with the logistical effort involved in establishing our forces in Siberia.

A little late—after more than 3 years of United States participation in the war and numerous major concessions to Russia, concessions which were to affect the peace—to be making this ABC logistical discovery. By then Russia had most of the supplies she had demanded; and she had carefully recorded the secret concessions of Yalta.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I wish now to pay my respects to a Democratic convention. The convention that met and nominated President Roosevelt for a third term. I say that everyone of the delegates at that Democratic convention who voted to break the traditional two terms for the President of the United States should hang his head in shame for having foisted upon this country for a third term a man who ultimately, according to this military expert of the New York Times, brought ruin to the United States of America. Oh, they wanted to win, Mr. President. They said, "We can elect Mr. Roosevelt for a third term." I talked to some of the delegates from North Dakota upon their return home. The substance of what they said to me upon their return was, "Sure, he should not have been nominated. But we want to win. We can win with Roosevelt." In substance they said, "To hell with the Constitution," which does not specifically prohibit it. "To hell with George Washington," who said that two terms were enough. We have got to hold our jobs, and to hold them we will break away from the two-term tradition. So those delegates to the Democratic national convention sold the country in order to gain what little miserable political advantage they could secure by nominating him instead of nominating some other one of the great Democrats who were candidates at that convention and they had many good ones—able, efficient, God-fearing men who would have been good Presidents.

There is one thing I say to the everlasting glory of Jim Farley. If everything else about Jim Farley is forgotten as the years go by, one thing will forever, in my opinion, cause him to be remembered as a patriotic American, namely, that he dared, at the risk of obscurity, which I hope will never come to him, to fight the third term. Of course, after the Democrats had won a third term for Mr. Roosevelt, they wanted him for a fourth term. Why? To protect their jobs. What happened to him in his fourth term? I have here a book written by the great military expert of the New York Times telling what happened to Mr. Roosevelt in his fourth term. Here is what he did. Thousands and thousands of American boys paid with their lives for that un-American democratic convention because the Democrats wanted to win.

I remember, Mr. President, sitting in the House Chamber at the joint session when Mr. Roosevelt came back. I saw him only a few short weeks before he died. Anyone looking at him knew he had only a few short weeks to live.

Here is what the New York Times military expert says:

Russia drove a hard bargain at Yalta. Stalin promised to enter the war against Japan within an estimated 90 days after the end of the war against Germany, but for it he got the Kurile Islands, all of Sakhalin, half interest in the railways in Manchuria, Port Arthur, a Russian-controlled "free port" in Dairen, and thus strategic hegemony in important northeast Asia.

"It is my belief," writes Sherwood—

Mind you, Mr. President, of all the apologists for Mr. Roosevelt, even Sherwood said:

"It is my belief," writes Sherwood, "that Roosevelt would not have agreed to that final firm commitment had it not been that the Yalta Conference was almost at an end and he was tired and anxious to avoid further argument. I believe that he was hopeful that when the time came to notify the Chinese, he would be able to straighten the whole thing out with Chiang Kai-shek—but that hope, of course, was not realized."

Of course the very sick Mr. Roosevelt was "tired."

So, Mr. President, because there were at the Democratic Convention a lot of weak men who wanted to win, who wanted to get a few more votes by nominating Roosevelt for President for a third term, they were willing to take this man and sell out the country. That is why a sick man went to Yalta, a man who, in the absence of the Secretary of State, and without even his knowledge, gave away the countries and the advantages which I have already named. That is why we today have our boys fighting for their lives in Korea—and why our beloved country is facing ruin and destruction.

Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate a long time, but I should like to invite the attention of Senators to the bottom of page 87 of this great book, from which I read the following:

The fault was doubly grievous. We not only hurt our own interests and those of a friendly ally, but at Yalta—inferentially, at least—we broke our pledged word to that ally. For at Cairo in 1943, before the Tehran conference and after Stalin had told Hull in Moscow that Russia would enter the Pacific war, we promised publicly the restoration of Manchuria to China. And to a pragmatic politician, Russian control of Port Arthur and a half interest in the Manchurian Railways could only mean Soviet strategic hegemony over Manchuria.

Nor was this all. During the discussions, it was suggested by President Roosevelt that perhaps the Russians ought to have a commercial outlet to the Persian Gulf; and maybe the Trans-Iranian Railway, built by American engineers, with the help of American capital, ought to be partially owned by Russia, or at least Russia should have certain transit rights. Fortunately wiser counsel soft-pedaled the proposal, and Stalin, apparently suspicious, showed no interest.

No wonder Stimson wrote that the meeting at Yalta dealt "a good deal in altruism and idealism instead of stark realities."

Yet, Mr. President, with this terrible record staring the Democratic Party in the face, in a time of war, when our boys are dying in Korea, when we are sending thousands of unprepared and untrained boys to Korea, the Democratic National Committee chooses this time, of all times, to issue a political pamphlet which is being circulated all over the country attacking the Republicans. The Democrats come upon this floor and ask for Republican cooperation. They say, "Please, please, Republicans, we have got this country into a hell of a mess, and we need help. Please, please, and please come to our aid and help. Please, please, and please vote for these bills." Within 12 hours after we give them help, Mr. President, they issue a shameful pamphlet, a political pamphlet, published by the Democratic National Committee, misrepresenting and lying about the Republicans.

I suppose that tomorrow or the next day, or the day after that, they will be standing up again in the Halls of Congress asking for the cooperation of the Republicans, and saying, "Do what you can to get us out of this terrible situation which has been brought about because of the fact that the Democratic Party did not have good leadership." And for all of this the people in the last analysis can thank that Democratic convention that broke the second-term tradition—and regretfully think back on "what might have been."

GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1951

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLANDERS obtained the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Senator from Vermont proceeds, the clerk will state the first committee amendment in chapter X–B, on page 447 of the bill.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, if the Senate is about to consider a new chapter in the bill, a very important one, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield for that purpose?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brewster	Hayden	Maybank
Bricker	Hendrickson	Mundt
Bridges	Hickenlooper	Murray
Butler	Hill	Myers
Byrd	Hoey	Neely
Capehart	Holland	O'Conor
Chapman	Humphrey	O'Mahoney
Chavez	Hunt	Pepper
Connally	Ives	Robertson
Cordon	Jenner	Russell
Donnell	Johnson, Colo.	Smith, Maine
Douglas	Johnson, Tex.	Smith, N. J.
Dworshak	Kefauver	Sparkman
Eastland	Kem	Stennis
Ecton	Langer	Taft
Ellender	Lehman	Thomas, Okla.
Ferguson	Lodge	Thye
Flanders	Lucas	Tydings
Frear	McCarran	Watkins
Fulbright	McCarthy	Wherry
George	McClellan	Wiley
Gillette	McFarland	Williams
Graham	McKellar	Young
Green	Magnuson
Gurney	Malone

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, in discussing the next chapter and its subdivision marked "X–B," which has to do with foreign aid, being the portion of the bill beginning on page 447, we have more or less reached an agreement to vote on chapter X–B and all amendments thereto on Monday next. So I am going to submit a unanimous-consent request in line with my understanding of what we have been discussing and considering for the last few moments while the quorum call was being had.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that on Monday next, beginning at 2 p. m., the Senate proceed to vote upon chapter X–B, foreign aid, page 447, and all amendments thereto; that following the disposition of that chapter and the amendments thereto, and not later than 3 hours thereafter, the Senate vote upon the amendment, to be offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], involving Spain; that no amendments which are not germane shall be offered; and that under the agreement the right to raise points of order shall not be waived.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, that is the substance of the proposal, and it will be written up by the Parliamentarian.

Mr. KEM and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield first to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. Let me call attention to the fact that the Senator from Illinois did not provide for a division of the time.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. President, I modify my request by including in it a provision that on Monday next, the time between 12 noon and 2 p. m. shall be divided equally between the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Senator from Illinois mean to include a provision for division of the time available for consideration of the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. LUCAS. I think perhaps the time on the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Nevada should be divided equally between the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair ask a further question: Did the Senator from Illinois mean to include in his unanimous-consent request a provision in regard to all motions, in addition to all amendments offered or which may be offered?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes, we can include the word "motions," too; that will be perfectly satisfactory.

EIGHT BILLION FROM PEACETIME BUDGET FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE—TOTAL OF $21,545,000,000 FOR DEFENSE

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I may say that I have no intention of objecting to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement—if the Senator from Illinois will yield, I should like to ask a question of the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY].

Mr. LUCAS. I shall be glad to yield for that purpose, if I may obtain consent to that effect. I so request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to yield to the Senator from Nevada, to permit him to ask a question of the junior Senator from Nebraska. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INCREASE PROPOSED REDUCTION OF DOMESTIC BUDGET FROM 15 TO 20 PERCENT

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the junior Senator from Nebraska whether he would consent to increasing the percentage of the proposed reduction of the peacetime domestic budget, but without any relationship to the $6,080,000,000 for veterans' services and benefits or the $5,625,000,000 for interest and service on the public debt or the $13,545,000,000 for the national defense, but to have it apply to the remaining $17,189,000,000 of the domestic budget. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Nebraska whether he will consent to amend his amendment to provide for a 20-percent cut, rather than a 15-percent reduction, in the domestic budget, which is covered in the portion of the bill discussed yesterday.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if I may reply without prejudicing the right of the majority leader to the floor——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Illinois has yielded for that purpose.

Mr. WHERRY. Then, Mr. President, let me say to the distinguished Senator from Nevada that what I am sure he is attempting to do is to increase the proposed reduction under the so-called Bridges-Byrd amendment from 15 to 20 percent. That amendment includes all the exemptions—and a few more, so far as that is concerned—that the Senator from Nevada has just listed or that he would wish to list. However, I am perfectly willing to give the Senate a chance to vote on a proposed 20-percent reduction.

On the other hand, I have already requested that the reduction proposed in the amendment be increased to 15 percent. Therefore, a further amendment, so as to change the percentage from 15 to 20, would constitute an amendment in the second degree.

If the Senator from Nevada will check over the proposed amendments, I am quite sure he will find that the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] proposed an amendment, in his own right, to provide for a 20-percent reduction.

So I shall be glad to join with the two Senators in an amendment to accomplish the same result, but which still will not jeopardize the standing of my amendment.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I am aware of the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Nebraska, and I should like to join with him in sponsoring it with the 5-percent increase—making a total of 20 percent. In fact, I had intended to offer such an amendment myself, but I now want to join the junior Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well.

Mr. MALONE. So we shall join in sponsoring that amendment.

TRANSFER $3,000,000,000 FROM ECA TO NATIONAL DEFENSE FUND

Mr. President, if the Senator from Illinois will yield further——

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. MALONE. I have intended, and I believe this is the proper place, to offer an amendment to the ECA provision in the appropriation bill. The junior Senator from Nevada is not entirely clear at the moment how the amendment may be made, but it will be worked out. It is an amendment to transfer to the National Defense Fund or at least to dispense with the $3,000,000,000, or approximately $3,000,000,000, now available or being made available to ECA nations.

ECA NATIONS 120 PERCENT RECOVERED

We are, of course, all familiar with the fact that the ECA nations are approximately 120 percent recovered, on the basis of the 1937–38 index of industrial development, and that this is a peacetime development that we have been financing. There may have been some question over the last 3 years as to the necessity, but now there can be none. It is impossible to develop peacetime industry while we are engaged in a wartime development.

The two things are not compatible. I shall propose an amendment which will propose to dispense entirely with the $3,000,000,000 or such an amount as may be available to ECA under this bill. But what the junior Senator from Nevada wants to do is to make that money available, to be included in the $10,000,000,000 defense fund requested by the President of the United States—I do propose such an amendment.

TWENTY-PERCENT REDUCTION—$3,500,000,000—$500,000,000 PUBLIC WORKS FUND

With the 20-percent reduction in the $17,189,000,000 of the domestic budget, this approximately $3,000,000,000 and the $1,150,000,000 for the arming of the Atlantic Pact nations—which should be included in one budget; then add the $500,000,000 appropriated for public works—the additional $8,000,000,000 is available for the national-defense fund. We will give the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] something to really vote for—the amendment will propose to dispense with the public works entirely, of $500,000,000, except such amounts as the President may believe to be really emergency work until this Congress convenes again in January 1951.

It could mean only a few months' delay at most—and by that time the situation should clarify so we will know exactly what is needed.

UNIVERSAL TRAINING

The junior Senator from Nevada joined the senior Senator from Maryland early in 1949 in the introduction of a universal training bill.

This legislation has since been buried in a democratically controlled committee—such legislation is needed to protect this Nation and to protect the boys through better knowing their business and protect themselves in combat.

EIGHT BILLION DOLLARS OF THE PRESIDENT'S TEN BILLION REQUEST

Certainly there will be no public works, except emergency works, during this period, so that with the amount allocated to such works, it adds up to $8,000,000,000 available for the $10,000,000,000 program.

The junior Senator from Nevada hereby offers such amendment. I thank the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS obtained the floor.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, may I first answer the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, the parliamentary inquiry is, Who has the floor? I believe I have the floor, appearances to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the Senator from Vermont is correct. The Chair was perhaps in error in recognizing the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. FLANDERS. I gladly yield to the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont yielded solely for the purpose stated.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, we have not finished the unanimous-consent agreement yet, and I have been standing here yielding to Senators, hoping we might get it accomplished. I did not think I had lost the floor, otherwise I should have taken my seat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Vermont will bear with the Chair for a moment, it seems that the consent request can be worked out shortly.

Mr. FLANDERS. I gladly yield for that purpose, with the understanding that I do not lose my position on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will later recognize the Senator from Vermont. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to answer the Senator from Nevada by simply saying that under the parliamentary situation there will be no reason why he cannot offer the kind of amendment he has been discussing, as I understand. Certainly I shall have no objection. What I should like to do is to get the unanimous-consent agreement on its way and have the Senate confirm it.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I do offer such an amendment, to be properly written by the clerk of the Senate.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I am not going to object to the unanimous consent requested by the Senator from Illinois, but I should like to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LUCAS. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CHAVEZ. After the Senate concludes work on the ECA chapter, what else will be left in the appropriation bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that there are still some chapters of the appropriation bill that have not been acted on, and that after the consideration of the committee amendments, if any, to those chapters which have not been acted on, the Senate will then take up amendments offered by individual Senators.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I may say to the Senator from Illinois and to the chairman of the committee that what I had in mind was this: Chapter V has been concluded, with the exception of the items of health and cancer research funds, the heart institute, mental hygiene, and dental activities. I was wondering whether it was the intention of the Senator from Illinois, in making his unanimous-consent request, to conclude with the bill on that particular date?

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to finish the bill then, if possible, but that situation is perhaps more or less in the lap of——

Mr. CHAVEZ. The gods?

Mr. LUCAS. It is more or less perhap in the lap of Senators, as to when we shall get through with the bill.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I merely wanted to know in order to get ready for the items in chapter 5 which have not been concluded.

Mr. LUCAS. If we run out of something to do, the Senator can certainly offer amendments at that time.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. Reserving the right to object, I find myself in a rather peculiar situation. I had already spoken to the leader on this side of the aisle several days ago. I understood that the final vote would not come up until Tuesday or perhaps Thursday. I should like to ask the distinguished majority leader whether that is true. I am particularly interested in the vote on the 10-percent over-all reduction, with the exceptions enumerated, and I am interested in the passage of the bill. I had therefore planned to be absent Monday, and to return Tuesday morning. Apparently I shall lose my opportunity to vote on the Spanish loan, which I would favor, because I feel that Spain is decidedly in the world picture. I know of nothing else to be done except to carry out my obligations already incurred. But I should like an answer to this question: Certainly the Senator does not expect a vote on final passage or on the 10-percent cut until Tuesday, at any rate, does he?

Mr. LUCAS. Probably not until Wednesday. I do not know, but we hope we may get a vote on Tuesday, but certainly we shall not vote on it on Monday, I may say to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILEY. Therefore, I shall not object.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, will the clerk please read the unanimous-consent request, as far as we have gone? If he has not been able to reduce it to writing yet, I should like to ask: Did the majority leader request that on amendments pending or which may be offered, 5 minutes be allowed to each side on each amendment? I do not anticipate that any amendments will be offered, but I think the unanimous-consent agreement should contain such a provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was not included. The Chair will advise the Senator from Nebraska that that was not included in the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. WHERRY. If the majority leader will modify his request to include a provision that on each amendment pending or to be offered, 5 minutes shall be allowed on each amendment to each side, I think it will be satisfactory.

Mr. LUCAS. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is, 5 minutes to each side, on each amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection at this time to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I want to be sure that the last request of the majority leader has nothing to do with the division of time prior to 2 o'clock.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, would the Chair state in substance what the request is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will endeavor to state his understanding of the unanimous-consent request. It is that on Monday next the time shall be divided from the convening of the Senate until 2 o'clock between the proponents and the opponents, the time to be controlled, respectively, by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM]; that at 2 o'clock a vote shall be taken upon any amendment pending or that may be offered, or on any motions, with 5 minutes allowed to each side for debate on any such amendments or motions; that the requirements of the unanimous-consent request as proposed are that amendments must be germane, that any right to raise a point of order is not involved or limited by the request; that upon disposition of the matters which will come on for vote at 2 o'clock an additional 3-hour period shall be allowed for debate on the amendment to be offered by the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] relating to the giving of aid to Spain.

Mr. LUCAS. May I suggest it is to be not later than 3 hours thereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not later than 3 hours after the vote, which will begin at 2 o'clock, the vote will also begin upon the amendment of the senior Senator from Nevada, and the time will be divided and controlled, respectively, by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] as to that second period of time, and the 5-minute limitation on debate to apply to any amendment proposed thereto.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I understand that the succinct statement made by the Chair relates to chapter X–B and has no reference to any other portion of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The Chair intended to state that.

Mr. LUCAS. And we shall not only vote on amendments, but on the chapter itself after we make disposition of the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The unanimous-consent agreement, as subsequently reduced to writing, is as follows:

Ordered, That on the calendar day of Monday, July 31, 1950, at the hour of 2 o'clock p. m., the Senate proceed to vote, except as hereinafter provided, on any amendment or motion that may be pending or that may be offered to the committee amendment beginning on page 447 and extending down to and including page 461, inclusive, being Chapter X–B—Foreign aid, to the bill H. R. 7786, the general appropriation bill for 1951: Provided, That no amendment that is not germane to the subject matter shall be in order and that points of order may not be waived under the agreement.

Ordered further, That the time between 12 o'clock noon and 2 o'clock p. m. shall be divided equally between those favoring and those opposed to the committee amendment and controlled, respectively, by Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. KEM.

Ordered further, That after said hour of 2 o'clock p. m., debate on any amendment or motion shall be limited to not exceeding 10 minutes, to be equally divided between the mover thereof and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Ordered further, That with reference to the amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. McCARRAN, providing that $100,000,000 of the appropriation shall be used for assistance to Spain, debate shall be limited not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by Mr. McCARRAN and Mr. McKELLAR.

Ordered further, That upon the disposition of the amendment proposed by Mr. McCARRAN, the Senate proceed to vote, without further debate, upon the committee amendment, whether amended or not.

Ordered further, That after the period for debate on the so-called McCarran amendment has expired, debate upon any amendment thereto shall be limited to not exceeding 10 minutes to be equally divided between the mover thereof and Mr. McCARRAN.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the current chapter of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I agreed to yield to the Senator from Tennessee, provided I may do so without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Vermont may yield for that purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, chapter X–B of the bill appropriates money for foreign aid. This part of the bill probably will give rise to a great deal of discussion as it involves the question of money and aid extended to foreign governments.

Last year we appropriated the enormous sum of $5,513,890,000 for foreign aid. The estimate for this year is about $650,000,000 less and amounts to $4,855,073,729. The House did not pass on these items of foreign aid at all, although the House took the lead in having a unified appropriation bill. We need not inquire as to why the House left out of the bill these huge gifts to foreign countries, but we shall go ahead and keep the foreign-aid chapter in with the other appropriation chapters.

The committee recommends a much smaller sum than the amount authorized for foreign aid for fiscal year 1951. The committee has allowed the sum of $4,522,158,729, which is approximately a billion dollars less than the appropriation for fiscal year 1950, and is $332,915,000 below the budget estimate. The committee thinks that, under all of the circumstances, it is justified in making this reduction.

Mr. President, I shall refer briefly to some of the larger items of foreign aid in this chapter. The largest single appropriation is to the ECA. The budget estimate for ECA is $2,657,700,000 and the committee recommends that the estimate be cut 10 percent to provide an appropriation of $2,391,930,000. This amount is $1,236,450,000 under the 1950 appropriation. The committee also agreed to allow ECA to use the 1950 carry-over funds of approximately $277,000,000. The committee arrived at these recommendations after very careful consideration and I hope the Senate will approve of them.

The next large item in the chapter is for mutual-defense assistance. The committee was unanimous in recommending the full amount of the budget estimate of $1,678,023,729.

On the funds for International Development, commonly referred to as point 4, the committee originally recommended an appropriation of $10,000,000 in this chapter. I would like to make it clear to the Senate that the $10,000,000 recommended is in addition to other funds for point 4 programs carried under the Department of State appropriations in chapter III.

In the Department of State appropriations under the Institute of Inter-American Affairs, the committee recommends an appropriation of $5,000,000 and in the appropriation for International Information and Educational Activities there is an appropriation of $2,600,000, for point 4 programs.

Since the committee recommended the appropriation of $10,000,000 in this chapter for point 4, I have conferred with the President, and I have also received a letter from the President urging that the appropriation of $10,000,000 be increased to the full amount of the budget estimate of $26,900,000. The President told me that the amount of $10,000,000 was not enough in his opinion as we were at war and more funds would be necessary to carry out the program to the best advantage of our defense. I at once submitted the request to the Appropriations Committee and we have reconsidered it and the committee has voted to allow the President the amount of money he asked for, namely, $26,900,000 for the purpose of carrying out the point 4 program which the President recommended and the Congress has agreed to. We are at war, the President is our Commander in Chief, and the committee thinks that we should leave no stone unturned to back him up. I hope the Senate will agree with our recommendations.

There are several other items in this chapter which I will not explain in detail since they are referred to in our committee report. I do, however, Mr. President, ask unanimous consent to insert in the record a table which I have had prepared by the staff showing the individual appropriation items, the amounts for 1950, the amounts of the budget estimates, and the amounts recommended by the committee.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first committee amendment to chapter X–B.

The first amendment was, at the top of page 447, to insert:

CHAPTER X–B—FOREIGN AID

TITLE I—FUNDS APPROPRIATED TO THE PRESIDENT

Economic cooperation

For expenses necessary to enable the President to carry out the provisons of the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948, as amended by the act of April 19, 1949 (Public Law 47), and as further amended by the act of June 5, 1950 (Public Law 535), including expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the purposes of this appropriation (not to exceed $30,000); hire of passenger motor vehicles; maintenance and operation and hire of aircraft; payment of damage claims pursuant to law (28 U. S. C. 2672); health service program as authorized by law (5 U. S. C. 150); rents in the District of Columbia; transportation of privately owned automobiles; entertainment (not to exceed $20,000); exchange of funds without regard to section 3651 of the Revised Statutes; and loss by exchange; $2,391,930,000, of which not to exceed $50,000 shall be available for expenditures of a confidential character (other than entertainment) under the direction of the Administrator or the Deputy Administrator, who shall make a certificate of the amount of each such expenditure which he may think it advisable not to specify, and every such certificate shall be deemed a sufficient voucher for the amount therein specified: Provided, That this appropriation shall be consolidated and merged with funds heretofore made available for the purposes of the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948, as amended, and such consolidated appropriation may be used during the fiscal year 1951 within the limitations herein specified: Provided further, That not to exceed $15,255,000 of such consolidated appropriation shall be available for administrative expenses during the fiscal year 1951, of which not more than $25,000 shall be available to the Administrator for any further action he may consider advisable to carry out the provisions of section 115 (f) of the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948, as amended: Provided further, That not to exceed $600,000,000 shall be available for transfers under section 111 (d) of the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948, as amended: Provided further, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be expended in a manner that will permit any of the local currency equivalents, derived therefrom in compliance with section 115 (b) (6) of the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948, as amended, to be placed at the disposal of any recipient country so long as any dependent area of such country fails to comply with any treaty to which such dependent area and the United States are parties.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I wish to invite the attention of the Senate, in connection with chapter X–B, to lines 17 to 24, on page 448, commencing with the words "Provided, further." This section relates to the difficulties which have been encountered under the ECA by certain American merchants in Morocco.

Those difficulties stem from treaty interpretations, as I understand, relating to treaties of this country with France and with Morocco and the relations between France and Morocco.

Mr. President, I would object, under any circumstances, to this provision in this chapter of the bill. I would object to anything which used an incident which, however serious, is yet of comparatively small proportions, as a means by which the work of the ECA to support the Republic of France might be removed. It seems to me, from all I can learn, that there are two elements of the situation. One element is that the problem is one which should be solved, if not by negotiation, by international judicial action. Furthermore, I am informed that a modus vivendi has been arranged and is in process of development with some success, and that the situation is improving as time goes on.

Mr. President, the remarks I have made I would make under any circumstances, but at this point I raise a point of order as to the language which I have just defined as commencing with the word "Provided" on line 17 of page 448, through line 24 of the same page. This seems to me to be very clearly legislative material in an appropriation bill, and therefore I raise the question as to whether it belongs in the bill at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont raises a point of order to that portion of chapter X–B of the bill beginning with the third word on line 17 of page 448 and going down to the end of line 24 on the same page. Does any Senator wish to be heard? If not, the present occupant of the chair is prepared to rule.

In the opinion of the Chair, the point of order should lie, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, in connection with this amendment, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement prepared by me and also a memorandum relating to the subject.

There being no objection, Mr. WILEY's statement and the memorandum were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR WILEY

MOROCCAN AMENDMENT MUST BE ENACTED IN GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS BILL

Mr. President, there is pending before the Senate an amendment written into this bill by the Senate Appropriations Committee in connection with ECA appropriations for the next fiscal year. Under this amendment, which I originally proposed to the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and which he fortunately accepted, provision will be made at long last for protection of American business interests in Morocco.

I have taken the floor on several occasions since early 1949 in order to protest the deplorable discrimination against American business interests in Morocco.

In all this time we have had one long series of exchanges of correspondence and talks with State Department officials. Time after time we have brought to the attention of the Department abuses of the Moroccan Treaty by which French officials have deliberately favored French business interests in direct contradiction with treaties. Time after time we have been given assurances by the State Department that the abuses would come to an end, that legislation would not be essential, and time after time assurances and pious promises have been shown not to be worth the paper they were printed on.

For the fourth time a protective amendment is now before the Senate, and it is my earnest hope that this amendment as written in the Appropriations Committee will be retained on the floor, taken to the conference committee, and thereafter retained in the final conference report.

To do otherwise would be to encourage other countries deliberately to break their treaties with the United States and deliberately to discriminate against American businessmen.

I shall not take the further time to review a history of this situation, but I ask unanimous consent to have placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point a further memorandum on the problem, reviewing it historically.

MEMORANDUM

The Morocco Treaty violations were brought to the attention of the Foreign Relations Committee by correspondence back in 1947 and 1948. We were told that the Department of State was investigating and would take appropriate steps.

Two representatives of Americans in Morocco called on me early in 1949. They had documentation and other evidence to show that the French had assessed illegal taxes and customs against them, had seized their goods, denied them the right to compete in many businesses, refused them a share in ECA business, and in general tried to force them out. The French had finally placed embargoes on almost all American goods, while giving preferred treatment to Argentina, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, and others.

I knew this kind of thing was prevalent in outrightly owned French colonies but Morocco is not a colony, it is an "autonomous country under the rule of a Sultan" (Willard Thorp's affidavit in U. S. District Court, Oct. 4, 1949). I know that our treaties with Morocco guaranteed our citizens and trade equal treatment with those of other countries and that they fixed duties and taxes. I put the representatives of the American group in Morocco in touch with Secretary Acheson in the Foreign Relations Committee Room and he directed Mr. Ernest Gross to investigate and fix the matter up.

At that time at a conference on March 24, 1949, the State Department agreed that illegal taxes and customs overcharges would be refunded and other redress given, that is, that all treaty violations which were not considered by the Department as connected with the dollar shortage would be ended, before acceptance of the embargo decree would be considered.

The President of the American Trade Association of Morocco reported this decision to me and to other members of the Foreign Relations Committee in writing. The arrangement has never been denied by the Department. It was reported to Morocco by a cable cleared with a Department official. Because of these promises, and because the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee told the Senate "We are sending a top man * * * to investigate all these cases, and if there is any discrimination or any violation of fundamental rights of Americans, they will be corrected, and corrected promptly" (Congressional Record, vol. 95, part 3, p. 3870). I am sure that the distinguished chairman was relying on State Department promises when he made that statement—because of all this legislation proposed to end the Moroccan abuses was defeated on this floor on April 5, 1949. As soon as it was defeated the promises were ignored and on June 10, 1949, the State Department gave temporary assent to the Moroccan embargoes with none of its conditions fulfilled.

In August of 1949 this was all repeated. Mr. Ernest Gross, then Assistant Secretary of State, wrote on July 29 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 95, part 3, p. 10764): "The Department has repeatedly recognized that American businessmen have specific legitimate grievances in French Morocco that should be remedied." He listed "failure to allocate to Americans a reasonable amount of dollar exchange. The employment of delaying tactics in granting import licenses for goods Americans needed for the maintenance of enterprises they were operating * * * the assessment of customs duties on the basis of arbitrary valuations of imports; the assessment of consumption taxes * * * and other matters such as the failure to install telephones, furnish adequate gasoline rations," etc.

Mr. Gross emphasized that the Department's objective is to assure an appropriate measure of protection to these Americans in Morocco. The able Senator from Pennsylvania stated: "At this very time American representatives are engaged with representatives of France in ironing out legitimate complaints which have been made against the French treatment of American businessmen" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 95, part 3, p. 10820). Legislation was again defeated in the Senate on August 5, 1949. Again, when the chance of action by Congress was past, the Department abandoned its "appropriate measure of protection" and ruled, at a public hearing to investigate the matter on September 27 that both treaty violations and the fact that Americans have been subject to discrimination in the administration of import controls were beyond the scope of the meeting. On December 31, assent for an indefinite period was given to the embargoes and to almost all other violations on the basis of a compromise agreement of September 4, the terms of which were broken as soon as it was signed.

When the ECA authorization was pending this spring, Members of the Senate for the third time considered an amendment to end the campaign against our citizens and our trade in Morocco. Again, the State Department claimed that the situation was being effectively handled. A majority of the Foreign Relations Committee decided that "in view of the arrangements * * * made with the French Government," legislative remedy "was not necessary" (Foreign Relations Committee report, p. 22). Despite this decision, an amendment finally passed the Senate on May 5, 1950. As a member of the Senate-House conference, I was skeptical of the promises made in a reassuring letter dated May 5, 1950, from Administrator Hoffman and a State Department memorandum confirming it, to the effect that consultative machinery had been set up and was operating successfully to handle American complaints. The conference accepted these assurances, decided that the Connally amendment could be invoked in case the consultative machinery failed, and the Morocco amendment was again defeated.

A letter from the president of the American Chamber of Commerce in Morocco, in May, listed 11 specific legitimate grievances, including most of those cited by Mr. Gross a year ago and many others and stated that the situation was worse than ever. He said that "conferences between consular and residency officials involve the same personnel and lead to the same frustrating results even though they are now called deliberations of a mixed commissio·." The State Department's own opinion of its consultative machinery, which had served to defeat legislation, dwindled once the legislation was defeated. The Department's report of June 5, 1950, to the Appropriations Committee stated:

"Our consul at Rabat has done an excellent and conscientious job in bringing about such solutions as are possible from the consultative meetings. The administrative tactics of the French officials, however, continue to delay the results and to multiply the minor discriminations * * * the consultative machinery has not been successful in solving larger problems touching French policy."

The only excuse which has been offered by the State Department for its failure in Morocco for a year and a half is that the French program is necessitated by Morocco's dollar shortage. Official statistics show that the import and export embargoes have actually raised Morocco's dollar imports by 50 percent, lowered her dollar exports by 30 percent, and brought her trade deficit to an all-time high. They have shifted import profits from independent Americans to French cartels and other favored French interests. They have given preference in trade not only to France but to every nation having a bilateral agreement with France, and that includes Czechoslovakia, Poland, Hungary, etc. While Morocco's total dollar imports are at an all-time high, the United States share of Morocco's trade has decreased. Dollar purchases from non-United States sources have almost doubled. (Moroccan Government Statistical Bulletin, April 15, 1950.)

Of all the treaty violations complained of, only import embargoes are in any way connected with Morocco's dollar position.

Furthermore, the Department of State told the conference that the Hickenlooper amendment, stating that treaties remain in full force until changed with Senate ratification, was not necessary. It has always claimed it was not setting our treaties aside. That same Department's memorandum to the Appropriations Committee (p. 258 of the hearings) states "Some of the complaints that they (Americans) have made appear to be based on the original treaty position rather than on failure of the French to live up to the terms of their agreement with the United States." The clear meaning is that the Department's agreement of December 31, 1949, has set aside the treaties assuring equal rights, on which Americans relied when starting business in Morocco.

Not one tangible result has come from all this State Department shilly-shallying. Not 1 cent has been reimbursed. Moroccan laws limiting American business activities still are in force. Trade with every nation on earth is preferred to ours.

The Moroccan abuses are before the Senate for the fourth time. The State Department is no longer claiming that it will end them. Instead, it is now trying to quibble about whether the violations which it admitted and protested for almost 2 years are discriminatory. It can stall another 2 years while debating that. If it intended to act under the terms of the Connally amendment it has had nearly 3 months in which to do so. It has stated in its memorandum of July 11 that "it is understood steps are being taken to create a more favorable atmosphere," that action by Congress would be "drastic and inapt" and would damage our relations with France. Just how much further does it wish to go, in our pursuit of a favorable atmosphere? I do not believe that our relations abroad were ever improved by a policy of weakness, which only makes us ridiculous. I think this farce has continued long enough and hope the amendment reported by the Appropriations Committee will be adopted.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, on page 447, line 18, I move to strike out "$2,391,930,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$2,450,000,000." This is an amendment in the second degree. The Senator from Missouri, instead of increasing the amount of the appropriation, as I have suggested, desires to decrease it. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that this chapter X–B, for purposes of the amendment, may be considered as a part of the original text of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, my amendment is pending now. If the Senator from Missouri wishes to offer his amendment now, he may do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into, the amendment of the Senator from Arizona is itself open to amendment.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I shall ask that my amendment be considered on Monday.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Snader, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 3859. An act to authorize the President to control the anchorage and movement of foreign-flag vessels in waters of the United States when the national security of the United States is endangered, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 512. Joint resolution making further temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1951, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, July 28, 1950, he presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 3859) to authorize the President to control the anchorage and movement of foreign-flag vessels in waters of the United States when the national security of the United States is endangered, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, if no other Senator wishes to address the Senate, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of Vice Adm. Edward L. Cochrane, United States Navy (retired), to be a member of the Federal Maritime Board, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. MURRAY, from the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

Paul M. Herzog, of New York, to be a member of the National Labor Relations Board; and Ewan Clague, of Pennsylvania, to be a Commissioner of Labor Statistics.

By Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Armed Services:

Joseph Frederick Green, a graduated cadet of the United States Military Academy, for appointment as second lieutenant in the United States Air Force.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the nominations on the Executive Calendar will be stated.

ADVISORY BOARD FOR THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

The legislative clerk read the nomination of J. H. Allen, of Florida, to be a member of the Advisory Board for the Post Office Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to make a few brief remarks with respect to the nomination of Mr. Allen. I know that the Presiding Officer will bear me out when I say that Mr. Allen is one of the outstanding businessmen, not only of Florida, but of the whole country. He is not only competent, but he is devoted to the public interest. I can assure the Senate that Mr. Allen's service in the position to which he has been nominated will be illustrious, distinguished, and in the public interest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). The Chair thanks his colleague.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask that the remaining nominations to the Advisory Board for the Post Office Department be confirmed en bloc.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. McFARLAND. I understand that the distinguished Senator from North Dakota desires the nomination of Mr. Morris L. Ernst, of New York, to go over. I move that, with that exception, the other nominations to the Advisory Board for the Post Office Department be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the remaining nominations to the Advisory Board for the Post Office Department, with the exception of the nomination of Morris L. Ernst, of New York, are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc. That completes the Executive Calendar.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the appropriation bill and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed, and will lie on the table.

RECESS

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I now move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, July 31, 1950, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate July 28 (legislative day of July 20), 1950:

FEDERAL MARITIME BOARD

Vice Adm. Edward L. Cochrane, United States Navy (retired), to be a member of the Federal Maritime Board for the term expiring June 30, 1952.

CONFIRMATIONS

SENATE

MONDAY, JULY 31, 1950

(Legislative day of Thursday, July 20, 1950)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. F. Norman Van Brunt, assistant minister, Foundry Methodist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

We would lift our eyes unto the hills eternal, knowing that our help comes from Thee, O God. We would laud and hallow Thee for Thou art good and hast done us good. We have had at Thy hand bountiful benefits all our days. Thy sunlight has made our path daylight. The dark night has had its star; and when our need was great our night has had its sun.

Remembering Thy past benefits, grant us to rely upon Thy sure mercy as we take up the opportunities of this new day. Help us that in all our ways we might acknowledge Thee, knowing that Thou wilt direct our paths.

"Set our feet on lofty places;
Gird our lives, that they may be
Armored with all Christ-like graces
In the fight to keep men free.
Grant us wisdom, grant us courage,
That we fail not man nor Thee."

Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. LUCAS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Friday, July 28, 1950, was dispensed with.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, and he announced that on July 28, 1950, the President had approved and signed the following acts:

S. 1049. An act for the relief of Amy Alexandrovna Taylor and Myrna Taylor;

S. 1779. An act for the relief of Phil Meyers, also known as Gil Meyers;

S. 1792. An act for the relief of Thomas Nicholas Epiphaniades and Wanda Julia Epiphaniades;

S. 2077. An act for the relief of Francisco Gonzalez Perez; and

S. 2864. An act to authorize certain administrative expenses for the Department of Justice, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Snader, its assistant reading clerk, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 157) authorizing the Department of Justice of the United States to recognize and to award to outstanding courageous young Americans a medal for heroism known as the Young American Medal for Bravery, and for other purposes, and it was signed by the Vice President.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE

On request of Mr. WHERRY, and by unanimous consent, Mr. TOBEY was excused from attendance on the sessions of the Senate today, Tuesday, and Wednesday.

On request of Mr. MCFARLAND, and by unanimous consent, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma was excused from attendance on the session of the Senate tomorrow.

GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1951

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], on page 447, line 18, to strike out "$2,391,930,000" and insert "$2,450,000,000."

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. As I understand, under the unanimous-consent agreement the time between now and 2 o'clock is divided equally, to be controlled respectively by the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM].

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. It is understood that we will start to vote at 2 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct. The time between now and 2 o'clock is divided equally between and controlled by the two Senators.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I call up my amendment, and I ask that it be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator refer to his amendment to the Hayden amendment?

Mr. KEM. No; it is an amendment to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator cannot offer an amendment to the committee amendment at this time. It must be to the so-called Hayden amendment. Otherwise it would be an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. KEM. I suppose it does not make any difference in the final analysis.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first vote would come to the Senator's amendment to the Hayden amendment. Therefore the Senator would get the same result.

Mr. KEM. Yes. I have no objection to its being so considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator wish his amendment to be stated?

Mr. KEM. I should like to have my amendment stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 447, line 18, in lieu of "$2,450,000,000" it is proposed to insert "$1,950,000,000"; on page 448, in line 2, beginning with the word "Provided,", to strike out all to and including the words "limitations herein specified:", in line 7, page 448; on page 448, lines 8 and 9, to strike out the word "consolidated."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEM. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. I notice that the Senator's amendment is in three parts. Does the Senator wish to have each part considered separately, or all of them en bloc?

Mr. KEM. En bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KEM. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHERRY. As I understand, the Senator has offered an amendment to the Hayden amendment. As I understand, the Hayden amendment raises the appropriation from $2,391,000,000 to $2,450,000,000.

Mr. KEM. The purpose of my amendment is to decrease the appropriation by the amount provided in my amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Has the Senator from Missouri fixed the amount proposed by his amendment, so that if it is applied to the $2,450,000,000, there will result the saving contemplated by him?

Mr. KEM. My amendment is drawn as an amendment to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's amendment is really an amendment to the committee amendment. Under the parliamentary situation it had to be offered to the Hayden amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. I wonder whether the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri is so drawn so as to bring the reduction down to the figure of $1,950,000,000?

Mr. KEM. I should like to have it considered so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first vote would come on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I yield myself 30 minutes.

As Senators will note, the amendment I offer would reduce the amount to be appropriated to the Economic Cooperation Administration for the fiscal ending June 30, 1951, to $1,950,000,000. Furthermore, the amendment would eliminate from the appropriation bill the sum of $276,761,473, which was carried over from last year's appropriations. The total saving effected by this amendment would be $718,691,473, or a saving of approximately $1,000,000,000 in the original budget estimate.

I should like to invite attention particularly to the fact that the amendment would in no way affect the appropriations for assistance to the Republic of Korea, the military-aid program, or several other programs included in the foreign-aid section of the pending measure. My amendment applies solely to the economic-aid program for western Europe.

The unexpended balance for the fiscal year 1950, which amounts to more than $276,000,000, is the amount that was appropriated to the ECA but not used during the last 12 months. I see no justification, Mr. President, for its being reappropriated. As I have said before, Administrator Hoffman is to be congratulated on making this saving. But the amount should be a saving to the United States. Merely because a saving was made in 1 year is no reason why it should be made available in another year.

Mr. President, this is a time for realism. It is a time for us to think and act in the light of things as they are. It is a time to reject and repudiate all unrealizable and visionary plans and schemes. It is my firm conviction that the amount provided in the bill for foreign aid is unrealistic in view of the position in which we now find ourselves both from a financial and military point of view. Our national debt is more than $257,000,000,000. Even if $10,000,000,000 would cover the added cost of the Korean war during the present fiscal year, the deficit, in the absence of an increase in taxes, would amount to approximately $17,000,000,000.

It is no wonder, Mr. President, that our foreign friends cannot understand why we are not paying our own debts, or at least balancing our budget, instead of paying their debts and building at the cost of the American taxpayers, expensive improvements all over western Europe, with the exception of Spain.

A few days ago the ECA released its report to the Advisory Board. In this report, on page 21, there is an interesting table entitled "Counterpart Fund Withdrawals by Purpose, in Dollar Equivalents, as of May 31."

This table contains a breakdown of the purposes for which ECA has permitted the participating countries to spend the Marshall plan matching funds, the so-called counterpart funds. $1,042,000,000 worth of counterpart funds have been used to retire the debts of several Marshall-plan countries. The amount thus used, it will be noted, is in excess of a billion dollars; $558,000,000 worth have gone for electric, gas, and power projects in Marshall-plan countries; $331,000,000 worth for agriculture and forestry; $224,000,000 worth for railroads; $196,000,000 worth for manufacturing establishments; $57,000,000 worth for roads, waterways, and harbors; $208,000,000 for housing; $75,000,000 worth for merchant and fishing fleets.

From a military standpoint it is certainly not in the interest of our boys on the fighting front for us at this time to be giving away critical materials, vast quantities of things that may be necessary to prosecute the war. The kinds of materials I have in mind are $200,000,000 worth of industrial materials produced in the United States, including iron, steel, aluminum, copper, zinc, and industrial chemicals. Those materials the ECA proposes to send to western Europe in the year for which provision is now being made. ECA also proposes to give away $448,700,000 worth of industrial machinery and equipment; $7,500,000 worth of rubber and rubber products; and more than $77,000,000 worth of petroleum and petroleum products.

So, Mr. President, we are increasing our own debt day by day, and it is proposed that we continue the shipment to Marshall-plan countries of vast quantities of critical war materials which we ourselves might well need before too long.

Not only that, Mr. President, but we are facing the specter of inflation. Nothing will feed the fires of inflation more than, first, the issuing of obligations of the Government to cover a deficit; second, creating a shortage in the available supply of goods. The large appropriations for foreign aid in the pending bill will have a direct effect in both respects.

Mr. President, I sometimes think the people back home in their thinking are a bit ahead of those of us who sit here in the Halls of Congress. Sometimes it is difficult to see the forest for the trees. A few days ago I received a letter from one of my fellow citizens in Kansas City, Mo. He describes himself as "a little man, a cab driver and my wife is a waitress, but we can read, and listen and wonder. We are beginning to see why we must pay such exorbitant taxes, and beginning to wonder what kind of men are leading us."

Then he says:

> Do you blame us? Where does Congress get the idea the rank and file of the people are in favor of the Marshall plan? They are not now, and never have been. I talk to over 30 passengers every night, and not 1 in 20 is in favor of it, and the ones who are, have relatives over there. There is something decidedly smelly about the whole aid-to-Europe program.

Mr. President, I have had occasion before to refer to shipments of war materials by Marshall-plan countries to Russia and her satellites. This is an ironical situation. It was hardly to be expected, in view of our overgenerous gifts of economic aid to the participating countries. However, the facts are plain, and, so far as I know, have never been denied.

For instance, it has been frequently said on the floor of the Senate that the Marshall-plan countries have 96 separate trade treaties with Russia and other countries behind the iron curtain. Great Britain, for example, has bilateral trade agreements with Russia, Czechoslovakia, Finland, Hungary, and Poland. Pursuant to these treaties a wide variety of materials, many of them potential articles and materials of war, are being constantly shipped by the Marshall-plan countries to Russia and the satellites.

On July 17 I put into the RECORD a table of shipments of war materials from Great Britain, Belgium-Luxemburg, and France, to Russia. The information in these tables was furnished me by the Department of Commerce. The original tables covered only the year 1949. The Department of Commerce later furnished me additional information covering shipments made to Russia and the satellites from the Marshall-plan countries during the first 4 months of 1950. I have now some further information which covers the month of May this year, bringing the information approximately up to date. This information shows that a great deal of such material is being shipped, and the shipments of certain materials are at a constantly accelerated rate.

I have emphasized the shipments of war materials from Marshall-plan countries to Russia because I believe it is a very important matter. It is important to know whether our boys who are having to face tanks in Korea, which are superior to any we have on that front, are facing equipment which has been fabricated from goods shipped to Russia by our allies.

The Department of Commerce has furnished me with information showing that in one case war materials imported into Great Britain have been reexported to Russia and the satellites. During the 5 months which ended May 31, 1950, more than $2,633,900 worth of machine tools were exported by Britain to Russia, Finland, Poland, and Czechoslovakia. Four hundred fifty-four thousand five hundred and thirty-eight dollars worth of these tools were exported during the month of May alone. That is new information, so far as I am concerned.

During the 5 months which ended May 21, 1950, Britain reexported—note this, Mr. President—reexported more than $67,320 worth of machine tools. Machine tools are being given to Great Britain under the Marshall plan.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, the time is limited, and I suggest that the eminent Senator from Vermont secure time from the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. I know the views of the Senator from Vermont on this matter very well, and I think he belongs on the other side.

Mr. FLANDERS. I intend simply to raise a question as to the information the Senator has just given.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. KEM. I decline to yield at this time. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator later.

In connection with our own consideration of the item in the appropriations bill for foreign aid, I believe the Senate will be interested in some figures which I have obtained from the State Department respecting the number of ships, combatant and otherwise, which the United States turned over to Russia during World War II. I have been surprised at the lack of success which the administration has had in securing the return of those ships.

These figures show that we transferred to the Russians 585 naval craft of various types, and that 459 of those naval craft are still in the hands of the Russians, and reported to be in operable condition. We have been able to get back from Russia only 28 ships. Others were reported as lost, damaged, and stuck in the ice.

Of the 96 American merchant ships which Russia had at the end of the war, 84 are still in the hands of the Russians, and presumably in usable condition. We have had returned to us seven tankers and one old cargo vessel. Merchant ships which the Russians retained include 36 Liberty ships.

The naval craft which were transferred to the Russians include 3 ice breakers, 28 frigates, 77 minesweepers, 78 large submarine chasers, 62 small submarine chasers, 205 torpedo boats, 36 LCI's, that is, landing craft—infantry; 17 LCT's, that is, landing craft—tanks; 2 LCV's, that is, landing craft—vehicle; 2 LCS's, that is, landing craft—support; 54 LCM's, that is, landing craft—mechanized; 4 floating repair shops, 15 river tugs, 6 pontoon bridges, 1 motor launch, 1 plane personnel boat.

The ships we have been able to get back consist of only 1 ice breaker and 27 frigates.

My information is that a request has been made by the State Department for the return of only 217 of the naval ships, and there has been no request whatever that any of the merchant ships be returned.

I may say, Mr. President, in passing, that I think several questions should be answered by the State Department. Why have we not been able to get any more of our ships back? Who determined that a request for our merchant ships should not be made? Who has been conducting the negotiations for the return of a part of the naval ships with so little success? The soft policy against Russia at Yalta, Potsdam, and since, has played a major part in placing the United States in the unfortunate position in which it finds itself today.

Mr. President, I now want to say a few words as to why I think that is very significant. That has to do with the ability of the Marshall-plan countries to defend themselves. On July 27 Mr. Winston Churchill was reported as speaking in the House of Commons, as follows:

> "It looks as if there is at present no effective defense in western Europe beyond the Channel." He said that unless government spokesmen could prove otherwise, he believed "the preparations of the western union to defend itself certainly stand on a far lower level than those of the South Koreans."

In the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of July 23 there appears a very interesting article, an Associated Press dispatch from Frankfurt, Germany, written by Wes Gallagher. I shall quote from it in part:

If war comes between the West and Russia, the United States will have to fight and pay the lion's share of it.

A glimpse at western Europe's defenses today shows them not only feeble and inadequate, but with little prespect of real strengthening in the future.

President Truman's request Wednesday for $10,000,000,000 more for defense means each American taxpayer will be paying nearly 50 cents out of each dollar for defense. No western European is paying more than 25 cents on each dollar and most of them far less for their defense.

There are varied reasons why some nations are not paying more. Many suffered such heavy war damages they have had to devote their attention to rebuilding economically. France cannot get large defense budgets through its strife-torn assembly without tumbling the government.

Budgets of seven of the main nations of western Europe show less than $4,000,000,000 will be spent on arms this year. This compares with $25,000,000,000 being spent by the United States, which represents 48 percent of the total United States Government expenditures.

Mr. President, I ask at this time that there be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a table of the comparative defense budgets of these countries, all in dollars.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Comparative defense budgets

[All in dollars]

Nation	For defense	Percent [1]
Britain	$2,186,800,000	20.0
France	1,200,000,000	18.9
Netherlands	223,000,000	25.0
Belgium	163,662,520	11.0
Italy [2]	123,000,000	6.5
Denmark	48,000,000	16.5
Norway	40,000,000	12.5

[1] Percentage of total budget.

[2] Total Italian defense budget is $538,380,000, but major portion goes to civil aviation, veterans administration, housing, etc.

Mr. KEM. Then to continue from Mr. Gallagher's dispatch:

Even if all the western European nations would put aside their sovereignty, increase their budgets and push building up of their defenses, military men estimate it would take a minimum of 2 and probably 4 years to build adequate forces to balance current Russian power.

So, Mr. President, we find ourselves having loaned to Russia during World War II a tremendous armament of naval ships and a great fleet of merchant ships. We have had no success or practically none in getting those ships back, although many of them, as I have just said, are understood to be in sound operable condition. In other words, they are in condition to be used against the United States; and now we propose to continue to build hydroelectric plants, railroad terminals, railroads, aqueducts, bridges, and military highways in western Europe, where in the course of time, if Mr. Churchill is correct, and if what Mr. Gallagher says is true—the ability of the countries of western Europe to defend themselves to protect these gifts of ours will be somewhat dubious.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I have allowed myself 30 minutes, and I should prefer to continue with my speech. Then, if some time remains, I shall be glad to yield to the able Senator from Utah and to the able Senator from Vermont.

Mr. WATKINS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FLANDERS. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri declines to yield at this time.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words more about the way our money is being spent. As I have said, I think this is a time for realism. Yet, Mr. President, the Washington Evening Star for July 15 revealed that ECA is in the night-club business in Rome; we are reported as helping to pay the rent for a swank Roman night club. According to the Evening Star's report, the club is replete with creamy furniture, sumptuous decorations, and a doorman clothed in green and gold. Someone may say that the amount involved in that undertaking is small—only $15,000. However, Mr. President, $15,000 would pay for a 155-millimeter howitzer so badly needed in the front lines in Korea today.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me that the issue before the Senate today is a rather clean-cut one, namely, is it to be funds for creamy furniture in a night club in Rome or funds for a gambling casino in Le Havre—also being built with ECA funds—or is it to be money for guns and modern equipment for our boys in the front lines in Korea today? As Mr. Truman has said, "You have got to make up your minds. It is one or the other."

Mr. President, in view of the course of events, I think it is out of order for us to make commitments to the extent provided in this bill for economic aid in western Europe at this time.

If my amendment is adopted, the taxpayers of the United States will be saved, and will have available for other purposes, in excess of $700,000,000; and still the ECA will have available for its program in western Europe the princely sum of $1,950,000,000.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether the Senator's time is exhausted. If it is not, I should like to ask him a question in his time.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, have I consumed my 30 minutes? I think I have about done so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has approximately 1 minute remaining.

Mr. KEM. Then I am glad to yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FLANDERS. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if he was saying, a few minutes ago, that $67,000,000 worth of machine tools had been exported from America to England and that the identical machine tools were reexported from England to Russia.

Mr. KEM. I said that at the same time that we were giving machine tools to Great Britain, machine tools were being exported by Great Britain to Russia and the satellites. I said, further, that the records show that in the month in question, England imported an amount of machine tools which subsequently were exported—the same, identical machine tools—to Russia and the satellites.

Mr. FLANDERS. The Senator from Missouri did not give the figures for that transaction, did he?

Mr. KEM. Yes, I did.

Mr. FLANDERS. Were those the figures for the same, identical machine tools?

Mr. KEM. I shall be glad to repeat them.

Mr. FLANDERS. That is the question I was asking.

Mr. KEM. I do not know whether they were Marshall plan machine tools, but they were identical machine tools shipped from the United States.

Mr. FLANDERS. Sixty-seven million dollars' worth, as I recall.

Mr. KEM. It was $67,000 worth, I believe.

Mr. FLANDERS. Oh, then I feel concerned, but not quite as much concerned as I feared I was going to be.

Mr. KEM. I shall repeat my statement, for the benefit of the Senator from Vermont. During the 5 months ended May 31, 1950, more than $2,633,900 worth of machine tools were exported by Britain to Russia, Finland, Poland, and Czechoslovakia—$454,538 worth of these tools were exported during the month of May alone.

During the 5 months which ended May 31, 1950, Britain reexported more than $67,320 worth of machine tools, and machine tools are being given to Britain under the Marshall plan.

Does that clear up the matter?

Mr. FLANDERS. That answers the question, yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri has used 31 minutes.

The Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I wish to discuss the amendment I have offered to the committee amendment on page 447 in line 18, namely, to strike out "$2,391,930,000" and insert "$2,450,000,000."

I should like to state that when this item was under study by the Appropriations Committee, it received very careful consideration. Upon recommendation by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], we voted an amount of $2,500,000,000. On that question, on a record vote, the result showed 11 in favor and 10 opposed.

It had been suggested by other members of the committee that the amount should be $2,450,000,000; and at that time I moved to reconsider, in order that we might have a more nearly unanimous committee report. That was done; and by a vote of 17 to 3 the amount was fixed at $2,450,000,000.

Subsequently, a few days later, a motion was made to cut the appropriation by 10 percent under the budget estimate. The action on that question resulted in the further reduction of $58,070,000 which leaves the amount that now appears in the bill.

It is to restore the appropriation in the amount voted in the committee by a majority of 17 to 3 that I have offered the amendment to the committee amendment.

In regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri to my amendment to the committee amendment——

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point for a question?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator on what date that vote was taken in the committee.

Mr. HAYDEN. About 3 weeks ago..

Mr. KEM. Let me inquire what day of the month it was.

Mr. HAYDEN. On June 29.

Mr. KEM. That was just 2 days after the operations began in Korea. Would the Senator from Arizona agree that our situation has taken on an entirely different aspect since that date?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; and therefore I am more than ever convinced that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri to my amendment to the committee amendment should not be adopted, for the following reasons: It is a favorite maxim of Josef V. Stalin that "production wins wars." He has made that statement many times from the platform and has repeated it in his writings.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. KEM. Was it not also a favorite maxim of Lenin's that, "We shall cause the Americans to spend themselves to their destruction"?

Mr. HAYDEN. Of course, everyone knows that the Communists would like to see a financial panic in this country. But permit me to proceed.

The greatest single deterrent to an all-out Communist attack on the peace of the world today is that Stalin and his Politburo know that in two World Wars the United States has demonstrated its capacity to produce abundantly every type of munitions and all the material needed to carry on that kind of war. The decisive factor is always military strength resting upon a firm, secure foundation of economic strength.

The critical importance of western Europe to the free world can be illustrated with a few figures: Western Europe has 274,000,000 people. The Soviet Union and its satellites in Europe have approximately 255,000,000 people. Steel capacity in western Europe, including of course, that of Great Britain, is about 50,000,000 tons a year as against 31,000,000 tons in all the Soviet sphere. Coal output in western Europe is about one and one-half times as great as in eastern Europe, counting in the Soviet Republic. Western Europe's electric power is now almost five times larger than that of eastern Europe, and its system of transport is infinitely superior, as is its level of skills.

Why should we allow the Communists to more than double their ability to defeat us by securing possession of these industrial resources of western Europe?

It is only against this background that the supreme significance of Marshall-plan accomplishments can be properly appraised. During the first 2 years of its operation, it has sparked an increase of 24 percent in average industrial production for all participating countries. This becomes all the more dramatic and heartening when we look at individual figures for industries of central importance to defense production. There has been, under the Marshall plan, a 52-percent rise in steel output, and 58 percent for cement, along with 21 percent for electric power, and 17 percent for hard coal. At the same time, there has been a 30-percent rise in the yield for all grains, 19 percent for fats and oils, and 16 percent for meat.

Hence in the event of a shooting war on the Continent, western Europe is now in a much better position to feed itself without the need to ship vast quantities of American and Canadian foods in bottoms that would then be required for war matériel.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Of this whole allocation, how much money is to go for food?

Mr. HAYDEN. The point is that we do not now have to send wheat to Europe, because they are producing it themselves.

Mr. WHERRY. That is the point. So when the Senator says they need food——

Mr. HAYDEN. I did not say that. I said the conditions had improved so that the European people can feed themselves, but that we can help to improve their economic position.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. That implies that we need to continue the same amount of food shipments.

Mr. HAYDEN. It implies nothing of the kind. It implies less need for foodstuffs, as I have just stated.

Mr. WHERRY. Why should we not then transfer the aid funds to military needs, if food is in abundance and clothing is in abundance?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not think the Senator heard me.

Mr. WHERRY. I heard every word.

Mr. HAYDEN. If we can help to create a sound economic situation in western Europe, with ability on their part to support their armies, then they are in a much better position to fight communism.

Mr. WHERRY. Well, they have food, they have clothing—what else do they need except military equipment? That is the point the Senator from Missouri made.

Mr. HAYDEN. Their need is for more steel and more coal to use in making munitions.

Mr. WHERRY. They are getting the steel from us, from which to manufacture the equipment.

Mr. HAYDEN. No; they are making it themselves.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator say now that food and clothing are taken care of, that military equipment would be the next thing in order, so far as appropriations are concerned?

Mr. HAYDEN. If I had to say that, then I would also say that we should cut down in our economic effort in the United States and put the money into arms and a larger army.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly our unnecessary expenditures should be cut down and transferred not only to home but also in order to further the national defense. That is exactly the position the Senator from Nebraska has taken, and that is exactly what the Senator from Missouri has been suggesting.

Mr. HAYDEN. I ask the Senator from Nebraska to please debate that question in the time of some other Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona declines to yield further.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the Marshall plan is developing an integrated economic power which in turn is giving rise to an integrated military power both of which are being welded with our own. Let us never forget that the Atlantic Pact could never have been signed, or if signed, would have been meaningless, unless the Marshall plan had first revived and vitalized western Europe's economy; unless the Marshall plan had first pushed back the Communist thrust to take over; unless the Marshall plan had made it possible for western Europe to turn out some arms today, but many tomorrow, for its own protection and ours.

Too sudden a diversion of Marshall-plan aid from general industrial purposes to specific military purposes, at this stage, would plunge western Europe into that disorder from which it has only lately emerged. It would derange, for the sake of an immediate and piddling arms production, the soundness of an economy which promises prodigious arms production later on. In this whole situation, timing is the key. Let us always keep in the front of our minds the central fact that western Europe has become laboratory and pilot plant for a United States foreign policy that is bold, affirmative, and tough-minded. The Marshall plan and the Atlantic Pact are the twin motors of that foreign policy and the forerunners of its application elsewhere. What has been done in western Europe can be duplicated wherever necessary in the rest of the non-Communist world.

Let us therefore, not be guilty of the murderous stupidity of impairing the Marshall plan which has proven its value by its deeds, and which against handicaps has shown that the ways of freedom can win. The Marshall plan has pioneered not only the single greatest success of our foreign policy but has also fashioned the formula for a foreign policy that makes sense. It brings to its job an accumulation of skills and experience that can develop and extend that formula around the globe. The Marshall plan, in its aims and techniques is the hard core of our foreign policy, tested and tempered. To do it damage would be in Bismarck's phrase "worse than a crime, a blunder"—a blunder that would haunt us all our days.

Let me ask, how can a starving people, a dispirited people, be expected to fight when they have no incentive even to live, much less to fight? To the extent that we have restored and improved the economic condition of the people of Europe, we have made it possible for them to develop a fighting spirit which can aid us in a world-wide defense against the advance of communism. My judgment therefore is that the proposal of the Senator from Missouri is contrary to the best interest of our own national defense. I have always said that we might practice altruism, and we might well say that we could not see people starved, but the prime purpose of and the controlling reason for the Marshall plan has been the defense of the United States of America.

Any wavering of United States interest in the Marshall plan, any crippling cuts in financial support for any of its interlocking activities would have a disastrous effect upon western Europe today. For the Marshall plan is not only the sign and seal of United States partnership but also the way by which western Eurpoe can attain the strength, economic, political, moral, and military, which, in today's world, are the precursors of peace.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Arizona has expired.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I yield 15 minutes to the Senator from New Jersey.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I find that I have prepared remarks that would require somewhat longer than 15 minutes for delivery. Therefore, I shall ask unanimous consent that the early part of my statement be incorporated in the RECORD, and that I may proceed with that part of my statement which I feel is important to the discussion which is now under way.

Before doing that, I may say that, as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, and as one who has watched very closely the historic progress of European recovery through the ECA program, I rise to oppose any further reduction in the amount to be appropriated for the ECA. I wish also to announce my support for the amendment of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] to raise the amount of new money for economic cooperation from $2,391,930,000 to $2,450,000,000. This figure, added to the estimated carryover from fiscal 1950, would make available to ECA a total of some $2,727,000,000.

Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that there be inserted at this point in my remarks the few pages which I shall pass over without reading.

There being no objection, the portion of the statement referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

My support of this figure rests on two grounds. The first is that sharp reductions have already been made, and that any further substantial reduction this year would gravely imperil the whole program.

My second reason is that today, more than ever, the ECA program is a vital element in the defense of the United States.

Let me consider first of all the question of reductions. It was anticipated from the beginning that the annual figures for ECA would decrease at a rate of about $1,000,000,000 a year, beginning at about $5,000,000,000 and declining to about $4,000,000,000 in the second year, $3,000,000,000 in the third, and $2,000,000,000 in the fourth and last year.

We have done better than that, Mr. President. In the present year the figure authorized by the Senate, plus the carry-over from fiscal 1950, was about $2,977,000,000. The committee figure, as adjusted by the Hayden amendment, brings us to a total of about $2,727,000,000. This is eight and three-quarters percent below the amount authorized by the Senate. It is also over 9 percent below the $3,000,000,000 originally forecast for the third year of the program.

Nevertheless, the question has been raised whether a greater reduction cannot safely be made, in light of the other great demands upon our economy. An amendment has been proposed which would bring about a reduction in available funds, as compared with the amount authorized, of nearly 35 percent. We have heard another proposal that the entire program should be abolished. I feel that these proposals should be immediately answered.

There are several points that we must remember. The first is that the ECA has been so cooperative in cutting its earlier estimates that in light of recent domestic price rises the actual size of the 1951 ECA program, in terms of goods and services, will have to be very substantially reduced. A decline in United States prices enabled the ECA on May 25 to submit a reduced estimate of $2,933,000,000, including carry-over, which was 1½ percent below the total authorized by Congress. The Hayden amendment brings us to a total figure more than 7 percent below this final ECA estimate.

But since that final ECA estimate was made, prices in this country have advanced rapidly. They are already at or beyond a point where the program originally planned by ECA for the current year would cost some $300,000,000 more than the revised estimate. In effect, the price rise in this country, even allowing for a resulting increase in European dollar earnings through exports to the United States, has already brought about a further material cut in the size of the program which ECA can carry out this year. We must remember that fact in considering any proposed new cuts.

The second fact which we must remember is that a cut in ECA dollar aid is multiplied many times in its dampening effect on the European economy. In very many instances, where dollar aid allows a European businessman to buy a key piece of machinery in the United States, or to buy raw materials for processing in his own factory, the resulting increase in economic activity in Europe is several times the amount of the dollar aid involved. These are the multiplying factors which have made it possible for the total economy of western Europe to rebound so rapidly in the first 2 years of the program. Naturally, when the impact of every ECA dollar is multiplied in this way, the impact of any reduction in the ECA program is multiplied in the same degree. Thus a relatively small reduction in this carefully calculated appropriation for ECA will have an adverse effect on the European economy far out of proportion to the amount of money we save in our national budget.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, having discussed two of the points, I proceed now to the next one.

The third point I want to stress is in answer to the argument that the Marshall-plan countries no longer need our aid because, it is said, they are already better off than they were before World War II. In my judgment this is entirely incorrect. To be sure the industrial production of the participating countries is now 120 percent of the 1938 level. But if we are to have the whole picture clearly in mind we must also remember the following factors:

First. Agricultural production, even though the ECA program has raised it almost as dramatically as industrial production, is still below prewar levels.

Second. The income from the so-called invisible exports—overseas investments, shipping, tourism, banking, and other services—which before the war accounted for a very significant share of European income and an even larger share of their foreign exchange, is now a mere fraction of the prewar figure.

In studying this question we have all been interested in raising that figure so far as we could, but at the moment it is merely a fraction of the prewar figure.

Third. To make up for the wear and tear of the war years, capital investment, as distinguished from consumption, is claiming a larger share of current production than it did before the war.

Fourth. The total population of these Marshall-plan countries has increased considerably since 1938.

All these factors add up to the undeniable fact that the conditions of life in these countries today are still well below those of 1938. We cannot do away with this fact simply by ignoring it. Dramatic progress has indeed been made since the almost desperate period before ECA began, but a great deal more needs to be done before western Europe can go ahead without dollar aid.

Now, the three major points which I have inserted without discussing them, I shall now sum up.

First. Because even with the Hayden amendment we will be making a 9 percent cut in the amount authorized for ECA, and because of the sharp increase in American prices in recent months the ECA program for fiscal 1951 will have to be very substantially curtailed as compared with original plans—even if no further cut is made. That is one of the things which have been very clear, especially since the Korean crisis. Prices have gone up, and further aid has been cut accordingly.

Second. Because of the fact that every dollar of ECA aid means several dollars of new economic activity in the participating countries any reduction in a carefully planned ECA program means an adverse effect on European recovery several times greater than the amount of the reduction. Of course, that applies also to every dollar they get to put into plants to make military matériel.

Third. Despite spectacular production progress since the dark days of 1947 the conditions of life in the ECA countries are still well below those of 1938, and much further progress must be made if we are to have stable economies in Europe.

The facts lead inevitably to the conclusion that the reductions already made are very substantial and that if we go beyond these reductions we will jeopardize the entire movement toward European recovery and self-reliance, which, Mr. President, I feel are an essential part of an all-out military activity in those countries.

Now, Mr. President, even if these points are agreed to, the question remains, What good is this program to us, the American people? What is it worth, especially in light of the new military emergency? In concluding I wish to address myself to that question.

In my judgment, the ECA program for European recovery is more than ever a vital element in the defense and security of the United States. From the beginning this program has been presented to us, and quite accurately so, as a measure of defense against communism. I may say in passing that I think it is more than that; I think it is also a positive, constructive program to enable these free peoples with whom we share a common civilization once again to live decently, to maintain and develop their free institutions, and once again to contribute to the free world the tremendous strength and vitality of which they are capable. But let us for the moment view the ECA program simply as a defense against communism, because even though that is the negative side of the picture it may be a matter of life and death today. In my judgment the importance of ECA from that point of view is greater than ever. There are two reasons for this, one political and psychological, and the other military.

First, as to the political aspect, it is known that people who are hungry and discontented turn to extreme political movements. That is why the Communist Parties had such tremendous successes in France and Italy just after the war, and we know what a vital part the passage of the first ECA bill in 1948 played in preventing the Communists from winning the Italian election that spring. Even in other countries, where communism is not numerically strong on the surface, its potential power—and that of other extremist groups with which communism collaborates when it is convenient to do so—is greatly enhanced by the presence of miserable and disaffected groups whose governments are unable to improve their lot.

That is true all over the world today. That is the angle which the Russians are using with such terrible effect.

The contribution which the ECA program has made in preventing these disastrous political developments can never be measured, but there can be no question that it has been vitally important. It has immeasurably bolstered the political and psychological defenses of western Europe. If it is abandoned now, those defenses will be in grave danger.

The second reason why the ECA is vital to our security has directly to do with military defense. Because we in America have viewed western Europe as a strategically vital area—perhaps the most vital in the world outside our own shores—and because we have seen that Communist possession of this area with its great industrial power and its long Atlantic coast line would place us in the gravest kind of military danger, we negotiated and ratified the North Atlantic Treaty, and we inaugurated a program of military assistance to these countries. Now, in the face of the Korean crisis, it is expected that this military assistance program will be greatly accelerated, and that a great share of the new equipment required for the common defense will be manufactured in Europe.

I desire to stress that statement. A great share of the new equipment required for the common defense will be manufactured in Europe. That is what we will be doing with the military-aid program and the ECA program.

But this military-defense program cannot succeed unless these countries maintain and increase their economic health. At the beginning we made it clear that European recovery would have priority over the military program under the Atlantic Pact. Now, it is obvious that the priority has had to be reversed under the pressure of circumstances. But it is as true as ever that to build up military defense without also building up the economic foundations of the countries concerned would be like building a structure on sand. There is no essential part of the economy of a country that does not contribute to its total posture of military defense. Roads, hydroelectric-power projects, food production, manufacture of steel, clothing, and countless other items are basically necessary for defense. And these are the very sectors of the European economy in which the ECA is capable of building up production and economic health.

In addition to this basic relationship between economic progress and defense, it now appears essential that ECA should contribute directly to military production in the participating countries by releasing counterpart funds for manufacture of military equipment. That is my own personal judgment, and I think it is important that we should consider it at once.

In light of these facts, Mr. President, I think we would be clearly mistaken if we were to take the view that ECA and the military program are incompatible. Far from being in conflict, they vitally reinforce each other. Taking them both together, in the strategically vital area of free Europe, we are now planning a greatly expanded over-all effort. Simultaneously we are planning a shift in the emphasis of that effort in the direction of greater military defense. I may add that this expanded effort, and this shift in emphasis, both apply to the European countries themselves, fully as much as they apply to the United States.

But this shift in emphasis need not mean, and must not mean, abandonment or drastic curtailment of economic recovery. Economic recovery becomes more essential than ever, viewed as an integral part of the political and military defense and the military potential of these countries, whose safety is so vital to our own.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I urge the rejection of any amendment further reducing the appropriation for the Economic Cooperation Administration. In my carefully considered judgment, this appropriation is a basic element in the defense and security of the American people at this critical time.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. If I have time to yield, I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator where he proposes that the Government of the United States get the money which he wants to send to western Europe for economic aid?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. It must come from all the people, realizing that it is a part of our strategic defense in his critical hour.

Mr. KEM. Does the Senator realize that the budget is out of balance, and will be more out of balance, approximately $17,000,000,000, for the current year if we appropriate $10,000,000,000 for military defense?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. The Senator from New Jersey does realize that, but we must tighten our belts.

Mr. KEM. Does the Senator from New Jersey know of any proposal to raise that very large amount of additional money during the current fiscal year?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. This year and next year I think we can do it. The Finance Committee is now studying the subject.

Mr. KEM. Just where does the Senator propose to get the money?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am not a member of the Finance Committee, but I have discussed it with Senators who are members of that committee, and they think it can be found on a pay-as-you-go basis.

Mr. KEM. Where can we get this enormous sum of money?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I imagine it will have to be done by increasing income taxes all along the line.

Mr. KEM. Does the Senator think our economy can stand such an increase of income taxes?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. That would apply to the whole military budget. All the bill calls for on this point is $2,000,000,000. The military budget is $13,000,000,000, plus $10,000,000,000, plus $4,000,000,000, the request for which will come to us today.

Mr. KEM. I understood the Senator from New Jersey to say that the military should have priority.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. The military certainly must have priority, but I consider the economic program which I am discussing to be a high point in the whole military picture. Without economic recovery, we cannot have military recovery.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator whether it is not true that the Senator from Missouri is against all ECA appropriations. He offers an amendment to cut them a certain amount, but is it not a fact that he is not for any of them, and never has been?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I cannot answer the question of the distinguished Senator from Texas. No doubt the Senator from Missouri can answer it himself. The Senator from Missouri is troubled by the enormous figure for military expenditures, and overlooks, it seems to me, the fact that for ECA it is only $2,000,000,000 as against $20,000,000,000, at a time when this $2,000,000,000 is as important to our security program as any part of the military program.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I fully agree with what the Senator from New Jersey has said as to the necessity and the importance of the ECA program. The Senator from New Jersey has been discussing our fight against communism and the urgency of taking care of western Europe. Does the Senator from New Jersey mean western Europe from the standpoint of particular governments, or western Europe as a geographic unit?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. So far as the Senator from New Jersey is concerned, of course the immediate matter before us at the present time is the ECA program with respect to ECA countries. If I gather what the Senator from New Mexico has in mind, he is indicating that we should include all of western Europe. I agree with him that we should consider it as a geographic unit and move right in on that basis. I would include Spain, too.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. CHAVEZ. May I ask that he be granted one more minute so that I may ask another question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time is under the control of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Does not the Senator from New Jersey agree with me that if this fight against communism is worth while, and if the ECA program is worth while—and I believe ECA as a whole is worth while—both Germany and Spain should be included in the program if the desires of the Senator, which he has stated so well, are to be realized.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. In order to clarify my position I may say that I think Spain should be included in our considerations. So far as the people of Japan and Germany are concerned—and I include Japan also—I think they too should be given the opportunity at least voluntarily to come in and defend their own countries and civilizations. They should not be made to stand defenseless against being attacked.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Not only that, but the geography which is involved should be considered as well. If we are to take care of western Europe, how can we carry on the fight without including Germany and Spain?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I think western Germany should be included, and I should like to see all of Germany included in order to prevent the onrush of communism.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I yield 15 minutes to the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Kem amendment which seeks a reduction in ECA appropriations to $1,950,000,000. The "watchdog committee," after an elaborate study, presented very firm evidence before the Appropriations Committee, in which it recommended $2,200,000,000. If we add the amount of money which the Administrator has not used during the last year, which is upward of $200,000,000, the Kem amendment provides an amount which comes close to the amount which the "watchdog committee" felt was necessary for ECA.

Mr. President, I believe an emergency exists. Certainly I would be willing to appropriate all the money and shall vote to appropriate all the money that is necessary for the military to accomplish the mission in the face of the challenge which now confronts the administration in the Korean situation. However, I ask my distinguished colleagues who are arguing against the Kem amendment, on the theory that we cannot cut any one of the projects covered, to turn to page 383 of the hearings on the foreign aid appropriations. There we find listed 22 projects, including Jamaica irrigation project, Gold Coast road development project, Northern Rhodesia road project, and British Honduras road project. I was in British Honduras last year. That project has not even been started. All that is being done about it is to attempt to sell to the people the idea of British Honduras. Several hundred thousand dollars are asked for that project. Project after project of similar character could be listed. Mr. President, I would ask those who say seriously that they want to preserve the resources of the country if they feel that projects such as that, which they would not even start in this country today, are more important to our national defense than are the bullets and tanks which our soldiers now need? I ask them to answer that question. That is the whole thing in a nutshell.

We must use money that we do not need to spend on the foreign front and we must use money that we can spare on the domestic front to carry on military operations. I believe the expenses for military operations will increase. By way of a thumb-nail sketch only, we have MAP, $4,200,000,000, and if we add to that figure the new military appropriations which are being asked and the appropriations for foreign aid, and similar items, such appropriations will aggregate nearly $30,000,000,000.

I appeal to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations to scrutinize these projects. I believe the President will scrutinize them. I would not be at all surprised, when he reviews the appropriations for foreign aid and also those for domestic purposes, that he will either rescind some of them or impound the money, which we need so badly at this time for our military forces. That makes sense.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I have only 15 minutes. However, I shall be glad to yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I have only a brief question to ask the Senator. I agree that all of it amounts to a lot of money. It runs into billions of dollars. Making these appropriations will hurt the American people. However, unless we do, what will we have instead?

Mr. WHERRY. In answer to the question of the Senator from New Mexico, the first thing we should do is to meet the challenge on the battlefield. Developments such as the road project in British Honduras can wait until we decide the issue in Korea. If we are to stop such projects in this country, we must stop them overseas as well. I was in British Honduras last year. To complete that road will take many years, and it has nothing to do with the present situation with which we are faced. I believe every Senator should see the reasonableness of the situation. I do not say that we should cut out all ECA appropriations. I say that with the recommendations of the "watchdog committee," together with cuts that can be made on projects such as those I have mentioned, the amount proposed under the Kem amendment can easily be adequate.

I rose to explain the amendment which I shall offer, and it is the only one I intend to offer. It has to do with the sale of strategic materials to the satellite countries and Russia. The amendment will be stated after 2 o'clock. The purpose of the amendment was suggested to the Senator from Nebraska by the debates on the floor of the Senate, participated in by many Senators, particularly my good friend from Missouri [Mr. KEM]. Its purpose would be to strengthen section 117 (d). That section provides:

> The Administrator is directed to refuse delivery insofar as practicable, to participating countries of commodities which go into the production of any commodity for delivery to any nonparticipating European country which commodity would be refused export licenses to those countries by the United States in the interest of national security.

So far as I am able to determine, no organization has been developed by the ECA Administrator to effectuate this requirement. The difficulty which I am sure and other Members of the Senate have experienced in trying to get statistics with relation to western Europe-eastern European trade proves that point. The "watchdog committee," to which I have referred previously, in its analysis of the ECA program, as published in March 1950 discussed this point in detail. It pointed out very forcefully the failure of the ECA to obtain cooperation from the participating countries, as provided for in section 117 (d). This is what the committee said. I read from their report:

> The problem confronting Congress is the fact that after nearly 2 years the wholehearted cooperation of European countries receiving American aid in controlling the east-west trade has not been obtained. It presumably could be obtained if section 117 (d) were strengthened by directing the Administrator to withhold economic assistance from all countries which do not satisfy him that they have put into effect controls which prevent shipments of goods to the iron-curtain areas which the United States itself does not permit.

In this connection it must be recognized that this problem might fall more directly into the sphere of the North Atlantic Treaty and its administration. Nevertheless, certain countries receive economic assistance which do not participate in the foreign military assistance program. The fundamental question then remains as to whether American dollars should go to countries which do not carry out our policies concerning trade with Soviet-dominated countries.

I have been quoting from the report, Senate Document No. 142. We are confronted with a problem which not only I but the other Members of the Senate have presented in great detail. I have offered this amendment, which I am sure will strengthen the particular section of the basic ECA Act to which it is directed, which act was intended to accomplish the very thing that is intended by the amendment.

Certainly there is no doubt as to what we need. I should like to place in the RECORD at this point, because my time is very limited, exhibit A. Let me state that last year, 1949, according to information from the most recent reports, which are difficult to obtain, the Office of International Trade, Department of Commerce, shows that there was $1,098,000,000 worth of trade between western European and eastern European countries.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that exhibit A be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the exhibit was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXHIBIT A

Western European trade with eastern Europe

	Total, 1949
Austria	$75, 771, 000
Belgium-Luxemburg	115, 097, 000
Denmark	55, 473, 000
France	105, 616, 000
Germany	59, 248, 000
Greece	4, 780, 000
Iceland	3, 662, 000
Ireland	288, 000
Italy	86, 247, 000
Netherlands	107, 002, 000
Norway	54, 987, 000
Portugal	939, 000
Sweden	109, 213, 000
Switzerland	70, 314, 000
Trieste	1, 891, 000
Turkey	30, 838, 000
United Kingdom	217, 539, 000
Grand total	1, 098, 905, 000

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, this exhibit shows the different countries which sold the goods. They include Belgium-Luxemburg—$115,000,000 worth; France, $105,000,000 worth; Netherlands, $107,000,000 worth; Sweden, $109,000,000 worth; United Kingdom, $217,000,000 worth. And there were others.

The total for the first 3 months of 1950, according to the figures I have been able to get, which are not complete, was $186,347,000. I am told that the sales are seasonable and that the first 3 months of this year compare quite favorably with the first 3 months of 1949.

Mr. President, I ask that the table showing these exports be inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXHIBIT B

Exports by ECA countries to eastern Europe, first quarter of 1950

Austria	(1)
Belgium-Luxemburg	$19, 603, 000
Denmark	12, 318, 000

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in the Washington Star of yesterday there was an article relative to the question I have been discussing. One of the paragraphs states:

> Leaks, owing to transshipments, are heavy and difficult to block. The United States has many checks on leaks and places a great share of the responsibility for preventing them on the American exporter. Also ECA investigators in Europe follow the goods to their final destinations. Still transshipments to the Soviet bloc reportedly have been numerous in western Europe. A recent report to Congress—

That is the report of the "watchdog committee"—

> A recent report to Congress stated that an estimated $200,000,000 in goods had been smuggled out of bizonal Germany in 1948.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. Does the Senator believe that the $200,000,000 worth of goods were all strategic and critical materials, or were they merely ordinary goods?

Mr. WHERRY. With the information I have at hand I cannot say that every bit of the $200,000,000 worth of goods was strategic material. What I propose by my amendment is to provide that no ECA country shall be paid any of the funds if it continues to ship to Russia goods such as oil, steel, and especially machine tools which can be used by the military for the purpose of making war, and which, as the distinguished Senator from Missouri pointed out very forcifully upon the floor of the Senate, were being shipped to Russia to be used in making more tools to produce more machinery which could be used against our forces in the field.

Mr. HAYDEN. Food, of course, is a war material.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. Does the Senator really advocate the absolute stoppage of all shipments of food?

Mr. WHERRY. No; my amendment does not provide for that at all. Under my amendment, if a participating country should ship food to the Russian Army, they would not get any more food, but so long as England, for instance, uses the food she obtained under ECA, and did not give it to the Russian Army, there would be no restriction. It is a very good amendment, and I hope the chairman of the committee will accept it, because it provides only that the material which is sent to a participating country must not be used to help the Russian forces. Certainly everyone should be for that. The Senator from Arizona does not want materials which can be used against American boys to be furnished to Red China through a satellite country does he?

Mr. HAYDEN. Of course not.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator does not want to have such materials shipped to some other country, and to go to the North Korean forces so as to help them defeat our boys, does he?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly not.

Mr. WHERRY. That is what I am seeking. Support my amendment, and all that will be stopped.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator indicated that $200,000,000 worth of these supplies were strategic materials.

Mr. WHERRY. Just a moment. The Senator knows I love him, he is one of my good friends, but the Senator from Nebraska never made such a statement. He showed that $200,000,000 worth of goods were being sent over. I did not say they were all strategic materials.

Mr. HAYDEN. How much was? That is the question.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish the Senator would find out. Our Intelligence does not know, and I cannot find that out. No one can find it out. I say it is the responsibility of the Administrator to enforce section 117 (d) of the basic act. If he knows that goods are being so shipped, he should stop the shipment of such materials to Russia.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to invite the attention of the Senator to the possibility, which I hope may eventuate, that we and the other free nations will develop enough military strength so that in a year or 2 years we will have such great strength that we will be able to retrieve the influence we threw away in 1945, and that then we can reasonably hope that the free elements in the satellite countries will have a chance, with our influence, working through the United Nations, to regain their freedom, and that the iron curtain will then be pushed back perhaps to the eastern frontier of Poland.

In that situation, does not the Senator from Nebraska think it would be a very great pity if we cut off all our channels of political influence and all our channels of intelligence, thereby putting the whole weight of the war on the backs of our own soldiers, and ignoring the fact that modern war is won in part by political and economic means? The Senator does not want to bring about that result, does he?

Mr. WHERRY. No. The Senator made a very positive and a very constructive statement. I am not at this time talking about the reduction amendment, I am talking about the amendment I offer, referring to strategic materials. That is what I am discussing. I wish to make the point that my amendment does not restrict in any way the relationship between the countries concerned, so long as the countries do not intentionally—and I emphasize the word "intentionally"—violate the provisions of section 117 (d) of the basic act, which provides that they shall not send strategic materials, knowingly, to one of the satellite countries, if it is a potential enemy. The Senator agrees with that, I am sure.

Mr. President, may I have another 2 minutes?

Mr. KEM. I yield two more minutes to the Senator from Nebraska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized for two more minutes.

Mr. WHERRY. I am satisfied the Senator from Massachusetts desires to reach the same objective I have in mind.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I have just 2 minutes. Let me complete this point, and then I will yield. I read from the article in the Washington Star of yesterday:

In the interest of national security—

And that is what the Senator desires—

In the interest of national security, American officials believe technical information as well as strategic goods should be kept from the Soviet. But in the absence of censorship, the Nation has to rely on a voluntary control plan. The OIT has undertaken to advise American businessmen in doubt as to what may be sent.

Mr. President, what I should like to have established, and it would be provided by the amendment, would be a coordinated export license system applicable to the European countries which work with us, in order to prevent the export of strategic materials, and a coordinated plan so that these countries will not intentionally export materials which can be used by Russia or the satellite countries for war purposes.

I now yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I understood that the Senator's amendment was worded so broadly that it would stop virtually all the export trade.

Mr. WHERRY. No.

Mr. LODGE. I would go along with an amendment which would prevent the sending of purely military materials, but I do not wish to cut off our channels of intelligence and make it impossible to use economic and political methods in the struggle in which we are engaged. The President has said——

Mr. WHERRY. Let me read my amendment at this time.

Mr. LODGE. Permit me to finish this thought. The President has said that one of our aims is to liberate Korea and that another of our aims is to become strong enough to resist aggression. Of course, those are two of our aims, but I think the President could have gone further. I think Americans want us to regain the initiative and organize peace in a free world. That is what I think the President ought to say. If we take young men away from their homes and jobs it ought to be for some great purpose: We ought to accomplish something radically new and that means a type of war we have not had before, because it involves the political and the military.

Mr. WHERRY. I wholeheartedly agree with the Senator from Massachusetts. Let me read the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Nebraska has again expired.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield me one more minute?

Mr. KEM. I yield the Senator from Nebraska one additional minute.

Mr. WHERRY. I will read the amendment:

Provided further, That, during any period during which the Armed Forces of the United States are actively engaged in hostilities while carrying out any decision of the Security Council of the United Nations—

Which is the situation now—

no part of the funds appropriated in this paragraph shall be used to provide assistance to any participating country which exports or permits the exportation, to the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics or any of its satellite countries (including China and northern Korea), of any article or commodity—

Which is the language in section 117—usable by, or which may be used in the manufacture of any article or commodity which may be useful to, the armed forces of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics or such satellite countries.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me that includes food.

Mr. WHERRY. If food were used intentionally to help bolster the Russian Army the Senator would not want that to be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Nebraska has again expired.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks the amendment, and also the complete article published in the Star, part of which I read, but which I did not complete.

There being no objection, the amendment and article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 448, line 24, strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That, during any period during which the Armed Forces of the United States are actively engaged in hostilities while carrying out any decision of the Security Council of the United Nations, no part of the funds appropriated in this paragraph shall be used to provide assistance to any participating country which exports or permits the exportation, to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics or any of its satellite countries (including China and northern Korea), of any article or commodity usable by, or which may be used in the manufacture of any article or commodity which may be useful to, the armed forces of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics or such satellite countries."

WAR POTENTIAL GOODS REACHING RED SATELLITES DESPITE CONTROLS—FLOW OF MATERIALS DIMINISHES, BUT TOO MUCH IS GETTING BY, UNITED STATES OFFICIALS SAY

(By L. Edgar Prima)

Despite a stringent export control system here and pledges of cooperation from Marshall-plan countries, war-potential goods still are being shipped behind the iron curtain from the United States and western Europe.

Officials of the State and Commerce Departments and ECA say the flow is being cut down, but that too much is getting by, both openly and secretly.

Here are the reasons:

1. The Marshall-plan nations do not have a formal joint export control set-up. Most have individual systems, none of which is as strict as ours, while others apparently have no controls worthy of the name.

2. Leaks, owing to transshipments, are heavy and difficult to block. The United States has many checks on leaks, and places a great share of the responsibility for preventing them on the American exporter. Also, ECA investigators in Europe follow the goods to their final destinations. Still transshipments to the Soviet bloc reportedly have been numerous in western Europe. A recent report to Congress stated that an estimated $200,000,000 in goods had been smuggled out of bizonal Germany in 1948. Bizonia produces many strategic items which the Russians are willing to buy at premium prices.

3. The customs systems of western Europe are far below the effectiveness of United States customs, and some prohibited goods undoubtedly are exported illegally by Americans each year.

In this connection, an ECA official said, "Some of the Marshall-plan nations do not have any clear idea of what and how much some of their exporters are shipping."

MAJOR PROBLEM IS EUROPEAN

It was stressed that the problem is not so much the transshipment of goods produced in the United States. This problem is under fairly good control.

More important are shipments of items produced in western Europe and sent to other ECA countries or to Switzerland and then to iron-curtain nations.

For months, some legislators, led by Senator KEM, Republican, of Missouri, have been asked what the United States is doing to stop such leaks.

An opponent of ECA, Senator KEM said on July 17 that Commerce Department officials made it clear to him that Marshall-plan countries "still are making substantial shipments of war materials to Russia and her satellites."

He recommended that ECA Administrator Hoffman be given the power to halt all ECA aid to those countries permitting such shipments.

Senate Republican Leader WHERRY, who plans to introduce an amendment to the ECA portion of the omnibus appropriations bill tomorrow, agrees with Senator KEM. His amendment would bar ECA funds to any nation exporting to Russia or its satellites anything that might become useful for military purposes.

The attitude of ECA, State and Commerce Department officials, however, is that such a step must be accompanied by "moral suasion." These nations are sovereign and would resent our interference, they explain.

EACH MUST MEET PROBLEM

Further, these officials hold that each nation has to meet the problem in light of its own trade and political relations with the Soviet bloc as well as its interest in the common security.

This explanation drew the sharp retort of "hogwash," from Senator KEM. He asserted that we had no reluctance about interfering in the Italian elections of 1948 nor in trying to promote the Schuman plan for a European iron-steel pool.

The American control system was set up in March 1948 to check the export of scarce strategic materials and to halt all shipments of such goods to the Soviet bloc as a matter of national security.

The Secretary of Commerce is in charge of the system. An interagency Advisory Committee on Requirements represents the Central Intelligence Agency, National Security Resources Board, ECA, and the State, Defense, Interior, and Agriculture.

The group helps with the security review of individual cases and the strategic evaluation of commodities. It approves the Positive List of Commodities, which is broken down into the so-called 1-A and 1-B lists.

1-A EXPORTS FORBIDDEN

Articles of greatest importance are in the 1-A category and may not be exported to iron curtain countries. They may be shipped to other countries, under license, however.

Items on the 1-B list, of lesser importance, may be exported to the Soviet orbit in certain restricted quantities.

An applicant for an American export license must furnish much specific information and faces criminal action for falsification. He must describe in detail the commodity to be shipped. He must name the country in which the goods will be consumed and the ultimate consignee. He must also list the names and addresses of all interested parties (agents, brokers, middlemen, etc.) and give specific details on the end-use of the item to be exported.

Marshall plan nations have been informed of our positive list and told why controls are important to the common security.

"We meet with the representatives of these countries in informal, continuing consultations," Wright, the State Department's assistant chief of the Economic and Securities staff, declared.

NATIONS ARE COOPERATING

"They know what we want and we are working it out on a cooperative, mutual defense basis. We don't feel we ought to go beyond that," he added.

(It has been reported in some quarters that the United States brought the matter of British oil shipments to the Chinese Reds to the attention of London. The shipments were stopped soon thereafter.)

Earlier this month, Senator KEM, quoting data from the Ofice of International Trade, told his colleagues that during the first 4 months of 1950, Great Britain shipped to Russia more than $1,087,000 worth of machine tools, a tenfold increase over the same period last year.

He listed in detail the amounts of machinery, ball bearings, steel-mill products, electrical goods, and even arms, sent to the Soviet and its satellites by Britain, Belgium, France, and Luxemburg.

The Senator stressed the importance of machine tools and Senator FLANDERS, Republican, of Vermont, a machine-tool manufacturer, supported him in principle.

"I should like to enunciate, sir, a profound truth, which is that the only inanimate thing which reproduces itself is a machine tool," Senator FLANDERS said.

Robert N. Golding, ECA consultant and former general counsel of the congressional ECA watchdog committee, had an explanation.

SOME TOOLS NONSTRATEGIC

"There are strategic machine tools and nonstrategic machine tools," he declared. "Why, we have some we'd be willing to ship to Russia today if she wanted them."

He insisted that before one became alarmed over a line in a trade report that a general item had been shipped one should try to ascertain specifically what the item was.

"For all we know the electrical goods sent to the Soviet orbit by the western Europeans might have been light bulbs."

Mr. Golding conceded, however, that we don't get very complete information on what the Marshall plan countries ship.

In an interview at his office, Mr. Golding expounded on the meaning of east-west trade for the recovery of Europe. Last year it totaled $2,600,000,000.

"If the Marshall plan countries are to get certain foods and raw materials from the east they must ship machinery and manufactured goods. That's all there is to it. If they don't, the Russians will cut off the trade. And the Europeans would look to us to supply the needed items," he warned.

Mr. Golding added that the aim of east-west trade should be to increase the economic strength of western Europe in relation to the east.

There is one other related problem which the Commerce Department has under consideration, but for which there is apparently no real peacetime solution. That is the control of technical data.

In the interest of national security, American officials believe technical information as well as strategic goods should be kept from the Soviet. But in the absence of censorship, the Nation has to rely on a voluntary control plan. The OIT has undertaken to advise American businessmen in doubt as to what may be sent.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN].

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, since we have very limited time remaining, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point in my remarks a statement I have prepared on the pending legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEHMAN's statement is as follows:

Mr. President, I am, of course, deeply gratified that the Appropriations Committee in the face of the present crisis has now recommended the full appropriation of $26,900,000 for the point 4 program. In view of the committee's action, my amendment to make this full amount available for the self-improvement and perhaps even for the self-preservation of democratic nations is unnecessary. I have never faltered in my belief that the full amount of $26,900,000 is essential if we intend to initiate and encourage any kind of a realistic, cooperative economic effort among nations which, though friendly to us, and anxious to become self-sustaining, do not have the organizational and technical talent to use fully their own resources.

As I have said, I am deeply gratified that the Committee on Appropriations has acted to restore the funds which the President recommended for implementing point 4.

I would like to take this occasion to say that I am aware of the need for economy in Government expenditures. I have joined, and will continue to join, my efforts with other members of this body in cutting down on expenditures for purposes which are nonessential to the security, operation, and welfare of this Nation.

But economy is simply a slogan if we do not balance our expenditures in such a way as to use fully all the money we are putting into these efforts to improve the welfare of this Nation and insure its security.

We proposed, for instance, to spend upward of $30,000,000 for a program of information and propaganda designed to convince the peoples abroad that our motives are unselfish and that we do desire to advance their welfare and insure their security as well as our own. I have urged an increase in this appropriation, too, and it is very likely that we will finally spend for this purpose far more than the amount now provided in current legislation.

Speaking from a strictly selfish viewpoint, we can say that our investment in the United Nations has now paid rich dividends. The peace-loving nations of the world have thrown their moral weight and, in some cases, their physical strength behind the efforts to repel aggression in Korea. This weight was and is being exerted through the United Nations. We dare not weaken that organization by skimping or hedging on a vital economic program which is to be carried out under its auspices.

In mid-June 54 nations, including the United States, met at Lake Success to pledge funds for the program of technical assistance to underdeveloped areas.

At that meeting at Lake Success the United States was one of 50 countries which pledged a total of $20,000,000. The United States pledged $12,000,000. This pledge was, of course, contingent upon a congressional authorization and appropriation. That pledge was made in good faith, although the other nations were perfectly aware that the American Congress had the last word on the expenditure of funds. I am confident now that the Congress of the United States will live up to that solemn commitment.

One of the chief difficulties in the Senate's consideration of the point 4 program is perhaps our lack of understanding of it. Most of us have little appreciation of the specific activities intended to be carried out. We can understand the information program in terms of the Voice of America, but the point 4 program is much less easy to comprehend. I understand that the chief difficulty faced by the Appropriations Committee in considering this proposal was the lack of a concrete and itemized program.

Since this program is an international program, based upon cooperative undertakings with other countries, no detailed and itemized schedule of activities was possible until the nations involved had been consulted for their views on what services they required.

The contemplated program is in two parts: A program of activities through the United Nations and a program contemplating bilateral arrangements between the United States and individual countries. No part of this point 4 program is or should be unilateral. This is not a ready-made program—it must be tailored to suit the interests and requirements of the countries involved. The basic theme of the point 4 program is the extension of technical assistance in all fields of endeavor. We intend to make available to foreign countries our own rich store of technological and scientific knowledge, in industrial, agricultural, public health, and educational fields. We propose to send experts and advisers, seeds and disease-resistant strains of special crops, and to export the knowledge we have to raise the standard of living, to cut down disease and epidemics, and to increase the productive output of all these countries.

For 10 years the United States has been carrying on technical-assistance programs through the Institute of Inter-American Affairs and under the terms of Public Law 402. Our technicians have visited many countries abroad. This Institute of Inter-American Affairs, in cooperation with Latin-American countries, has developed demonstration projects which have changed the living conditions and the way of life of thousands of impoverished and disease-ridden people. By demonstrating modern scientific techniques, health has been improved, working conditions made tolerable, and more and better food put into the mouths of hungry individuals.

American geological experts have given expert advice and made preliminary surveys which have resulted in the location of entire new fields of critical ores and minerals. We have shown how to reclaim wasted lands, we have eradicated malaria, we have stopped epidemics, we have brought hope to areas where hope was lost, we have given stability to governments struggling to rehabilitate their economies.

I should like to give some specific examples: A child health specialist of the United States Children's Bureau, working in the town of Nuevo Laredo, on the Mexican border, was instrumental over a 2-year period in reducing the deaths of children under 1 year of age by more than 50 percent. Clinics for the treatment of yaws, established by the Institute of Inter-American Affairs in Haiti, helped cure 100,000 farm workers in that country. Drainage work carried out by the Institute for the Control of Malaria made it possible to bring 10,000 acres of farmland back into cultivation.

Pioneer work in this field has also been done by the World Health Organization. In one rich agricultural area in India malaria had been so severe that 104 villages had been totally abandoned. World Health Organization teams, in the space of less than 1 year, succeeded in eliminating infected mosquitoes from the area surrounding these villages. Refugee families came back to the villages to bring back into production lands urgently needed to meet the tremendous food shortages facing India today.

The point 4 program would include not only work in the field of health but in the development of natural resources.

Tungsten, tin, and deposits of lignite coal adequate to support an important mining industry have existed in Thailand. In that country a team of three United States and four native geologists has just completed a basic survey of these resources as a preliminary to the large-scale developments of these deposits.

In Brazil, the cooperative work of United States and Brazilian geologists has uncovered the largest manganese reserves in the Western Hemisphere. Such developments help to meet the needs of these countries as well as of the world generally, and provide new sources of income and employment for the country in which they are located.

In Liberia, United States technicians have helped map out roads and the timber supply, and to open up iron deposits. American agricultural experts have helped expand rice production for the local market, and the production of palm oil and cocoa for export. In one village near Monrovia, the result has been to increase the average cash income of the people from $5 to $35 per person.

In El Salvador, American agricultural technicians have helped develop and distribute to the farmer new corn varieties which produce 45 to 60 bushels per acre, instead of the old varieties which produced only 12 bushels per acre.

In the Philippines, fish is second only to rice in the national diet. The work of American fishery experts under our technical aid program for the Philippines is resulting in replacing primitive-type fishing gear with more efficient devices. The price of fish to the consumer has decreased because of the more plentiful supply, and the quality of the marketed product is improving.

The rural education program of the institute of inter-American Affairs in Bolivia has resulted in nearly doubling the number of rural school centers. The project has directly or indirectly benefited well over half a million children and adults.

The impact of these activities on the economy and living conditions of other peoples is tremendous. And they know that it is the United States which is cooperating with them to make such improvement possible.

The UN, as I have stated, has also been at work, through its specialized agencies, providing technical advice and assistance in various areas of the world. These efforts have been on a small scale because the funds available have been small and the number of technicians available for this work has been limited. I have already referred to the activities of the World Health Organization. It is this kind of work which led the chairman of the UN conference which formulated that UN program, to call it the most constructive program so far prepared by the UN.

This then is the point 4 program. It is not a relief program. It calls for no shipment of food, goods, or other commodities. It calls for no capital loans or grants.

It is simply a program for the sending of experts from this country and from other countries to share their technical knowledge with those who have little or none. It calls for bringing to the United States alert young scientists and professionals from these underdeveloped nations so that they may learn first-hand our methods and our techniques.

I have tried to bring it out of the half light of vague generalities into the full light of specific details. I have tried to indicate its importance in the great struggle which is agitating the world today. I would like to say to this Senate that the point 4 program, or even the promise it holds forth—for it will take some time for this program to show results—may mean as much in the present world struggle as the military measures which we must and will take.

Point 4 establishes the essential framework for the building of the structure of world peace for that day—and I pray it may come soon—when we will no longer be forced to think in terms of war, of death, and of conflict, and may turn with full heart to goals of peace, freedom, and fullness of life for ourselves and our fellow men.

Mr. LUCAS. I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. President, it is somewhat amazing to me that in this unusual hour of peril to our Nation and to other free countries throughout the world, there should be offered amendments which would emasculate the European recovery program. If there was ever a time when men should yield and bend, regardless of their previous positions with respect to the European recovery program, it is at this particular hour in the history of our Republic. But, instead of that, we find the same Senators who have fought the Marshall plan from the very beginning, still on the floor of the Senate making the same kind of arguments against this recovery program which has done so much to place the western European democracies once again upon their economic feet. Yet, the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM] and the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] would, if they were adopted, absolutely destroy the European recovery program in its entirety.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I cannot yield.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator issued a challenge.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I have only 10 minutes. I ask the Senator please not to ask me to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I make the statement that whatever the Senator from Nebraska may say about his amendment in the form in which it is at present, as the Senator from Massachusetts said and the Senator from Arizona has said, certainly food is war material, and if food is sent to the people of Russia, or her satellites, even though it is not sent direct to the army, it is replacing food that goes direct to the Russian Army. That is a fact that cannot be challenged. But to destroy all the trade between the east and the west in Europe—and that is exactly what would be done by the amendments—is to destroy the Marshall plan. Mr. President, this means in no sense that I am for shipping real war material, such as planes, tanks, and guns, to Russia or any of her satellites. The Senators who have been against the ECA program from the beginning desire to destroy it through the back door if they possibly can, by means of the type of emasculating amendments they have offered. They have tirelessly attempted to defeat this program by making it unworkable.

Mr. President, if it were not for the Marshall plan at this moment, in my humble judgment—and I think it is the judgment of the great mass of American people—the European countries who are now the beneficiaries of the Marshall plan would be under the iron and tyrannical heel of communism. If it were not for the Marshall plan, the Kremlin, the men of Moscow, at this very moment would have France, Italy, Belgium, and the Netherlands, Sweden, Norway, and Denmark, in their tyrannical and enslaving grasp. Only England would be standing up against the threat of the infiltration of the communistic poison. Yet, notwithstanding the communistic threat throughout the whole world at this very moment, which, in view of what is now happening in Korea, is very evident, for we know who is behind the North Korean movement, we know the power which is behind it, we find Senators still clinging to the old isolationist stand in the United States Senate, saying in effect "Give them nothing. Cut the appropriations for the Marshall plan down a billion dollars." We can live alone in this atomic world.

That would destroy the plan in its entirety. It would destroy the morale of the free people of the countries of western Europe. Never in the history of America have we had such need for friends and allies as we have at this very moment. This is a crucial hour, one of the most dangerous hours in the history of America. Yet there are Senators who seek to destroy a plan which has done so much to keep communism from spreading its poisonous tentacles throughout the western democracies, having a population of 270,000,000. We need them as our friends. We need them as our allies. We need them at this hour. We should give them not only the kind of assistance we give them under the Marshall plan, but also give them military aid to meet the challenge of communism, the onrush of communism, which seeks to sweep over the world and enslave us all.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I cannot yield.

Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri talks about being realistic in this hour. I wish more Senators were as realistic as those who have been going along with the Marshall plan and the military-assistance program, the Atlantic Fact, and all other bipartisan measures the last few years in our efforts to find the road to a durable peace. I submit that the junior Senator from Missouri has consistently advocated a short-sighted and ineffectual foreign policy. His course is not the wise one at this hour of history. Certainly through aid to Turkey and Greece, by the Marshall plan, we have kept communism from spreading throughout Europe, as it is in China today.

Mr. President, I say we are the ones who are the realists in this hour, and that the Senator from Missouri and others who join with him in trying to reduce the appropriation by $1,000,000,000 are still unrealistic, they are still living in the McKinley age of 40 years ago, believing that this country can get along without the people of western Europe.

The Senator from Missouri says we have to see things as they are. We who favor the Marshall plan contend we do see things as they are. As a result of what is going on in Korea this very moment we contend we can look into the future and see the great dangers which exist to the American Republic.

Mr. President, the affair in Korea is not a local one. No one knows what will happen tomorrow. A move similar to that in Korea may be made in other parts of the world, followed by a communistic tirade such as we have heard against us recently. So to reduce the ECA appropriation at this moment is to play directly into the hands of Stalin and his group of international bandits who run the Politburo in the Kremlin at Moscow. Of course, Stalin would like to have that done. He has never wanted the Marshall plan. He has fought against it from the beginning. He would not permit Poland or Czechoslovakia or other countries to come into the Marshall plan because he saw in the Marshall plan something worth while for the economic recovery of those nations across the sea. Recovery in their economic affairs is a direct aid and comfort and help to the United States of America.

Mr. President, appropriating for ECA aid is not throwing money down a rat hole; this amendment is a direct blow at England. Who was it who first came to our aid in Asiatic waters? It was England with her fleet. She is also sending ground troops to help us along. Yet, for the past months and years, we have heard tirades against socialistic England whenever we have tried to grant and loan her money under the ECA program.

As I said before the Korean affair on the floor of the Senate, when the chips are down in the world-wide conflagration in which we may be engaged, we will find England—regardless of the kind of government she has; and no one detests socialism more than I do—standing by the side of the United States of America. At the present time she is our real ally in Europe and Asia.

To hurt England at this hour, through cutting off money under the ECA program, not only will be doing a disservice to our western European allies, but it will be doing a disservice to the safety and security of our own country. It will give aid and comfort to communism.

I repeat that at this particular hour we need all the friends we can have. We should do nothing to disturb the relationship which exists at this moment with respect to the ECA funds which we are sending across the water.

Mr. President, I sincerely hope the Senate will not vote for any of these crippling amendments. They are emasculating amendments, designed to cripple the ECA to the point where it cannot be effective, to the point where Paul Hoffman, the great Administrator, will have no possibility of administering it in an efficacious way.

The Kem amendment would defeat our purposes in that respect and would disturb the morale of the people of western Europe, at this time when we in America should do everything within our poor power to raise and lift their morale.

So I hope the Senate at this hour will be more realistic than it has ever been before. I hope Senators who in the past have voted against ECA appropriations, at this time will give ECA the benefit of the doubt, because ECA needs the cooperation of all Members of the Senate—America needs this unity and the free world needs it. The Senate must rise to a level of high wisdom. We must reject amendments which would bring utter chaos to our friends abroad.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, how much time have I remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seven minutes.

Mr. KEM. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, there seems to be some question about the report of the "watchdog" committee and where it came from. I should like to call attention to the fact that the report is to be found on page 265 of the hearings before the Appropriations Committee, and it was given to the Appropriations Committee members.

Mr. President, the distinguished majority leader would have us believe that those who have not voted to provide every dollar that ECA has wanted are responsible for the situation which exists today.

To the contrary, the responsibility for the situation existing today rests on the present administration because of its policy in regard to Asia. No one can deny that. That is clearly demonstrated by the fact that the policy in regard to Asia the administration has had up until very recently has now been completely repudiated, it has adopted a policy entirely contrary to what its policy has been.

So far as China is concerned, the administration's policy was to "wait until the dust settles." The administration has followed a policy that the situation in China had nothing to do with ECA or with Korea.

I voted for China aid, I voted for Korean aid, and I voted for the sending of military equipment to Korea. However, what has the administration done in that connection? Under the military assistance program of last year this administration allotted the South Koreans only $2,600,000. However, how much did the South Koreans get? They did not get a dime's worth. They finally were allotted a little wire for repairs which cost $200. It is on the way there now, and has not yet been paid for.

Yet some Senators claim that the responsibility for what has happened rests on the shoulders of Senators who had the nerve to stand on this floor and ask that such action be justified or else that the policy be changed. What has happened is the fault of this administration, Mr. President, which ever since 1944 has followed a policy of "wait and let the dust settle in China."

I voted againt confirmation of the nomination of the present Secretary of State, the man who was the architect of that policy, and who still is Secretary of State and still is the architect of the foreign policy of the United States, and will continue to be until he has been repudiated by the President. The vote I cast against the confirmation of his nomination is the best vote I ever cast.

Why should anyone want to vote for money in support of a policy of the kind I have indicated? Why should anyone wish to support a policy of "wait until the dust settles"? How can anyone dispute the fact that today our boys are being attacked by troops using equipment and supplies, including gasoline, which, under our policy, have been allowed to go to the Chinese Reds?

Mr. President, my amendment will clear up such a loophole and will make it possible for us to make sure that no further strategic materials will go from this country to Russia and her satellites, in eastern Europe or Red China.

Let us be united in stopping such things. That is the way to win the war in the Pacific.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the question before the Senate at this time is an amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, relating to the ECA.

The minority leader has seen fit to take a considerable amount of his time to talk about political considerations and the Secretary of State and what happened in China. I do not care to discuss those matters. I am willing to discuss them, but they are not before the Senate.

Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM] calls for a very large cut in the ECA appropriation.

Is the Senator from Missouri really interested in the ECA appropriation, or is he endeavoring to cripple ECA and wound it and cut down its appropriation? I have before me the records of the vote on the original Economic Cooperation Act of 1948. Among Senators who voted "nay" at that time, the name of the Senator from Missouri shines like an evening star. When we examine the vote on the question of the passage of the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948, we find that among the "nays" is the name of the Senator from Missouri.

When we examine the vote on the question of the passage of the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948, as amended, among the seven "nays" is the name of the distinguished Senator from Missouri.

Again, Mr. President, when it came to the question of furnishing military assistance to Europe, allied more or less with the general principle of the ECA, we find among those voting "nay" the name of the distinguished Senator from Missouri.

And when it came to the question of the North Atlantic Treaty, lining up the democracies of western Europe with Canada and the United States and other countries, we find that among those who voted "nay" was the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. President, with that sort of a record behind the Senator from Missouri—opposing the North Atlantic Treaty and the arms aid and the ECA—can we expect anything good, so far as ECA is concerned, to come from the hands of the Senator from Missouri, who has been against it? Yet he appears as its friend. He wants to amend the act. He wants to cut the original item as we agreed upon it in committee by about $1,000,000,000. The proposal would cut the amount of the appropriation in the pending bill from $2,391,930,000 to $1,950,000,000.

Mr. President, this is not the time for us to halt or to equivocate on the ECA program. A time of peril is not a time to retreat. This is no time to run for cover. We initiated this program to aid in the economic rehabilitation of western Europe. We realized when we did so that economic rehabilitation is, after all, in aid of military preparation and military defense. Military defense cannot proceed except upon the basis of a sound economy. The reports from western Europe regarding what has been done under ECA are astounding, so much so that they sometimes shake one's credulity. Production in those countries has been vastly improved; in most cases, to a point above the prewar level.

So, Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not send to western Europe the message that we are lacking in our willingness to continue this program to the point of achieving its result.

Reference is made to our solemn responsibility to Korea and Asia. We are aware of those responsibilities, but we cannot, before the whole world, send forth a message that we are weakening, that we are unable to meet our responsibilities, that we are unwilling to keep faith with the powers of western Europe whom we have assured of our aid through the ECA program, through the Atlantic Pact, and through the arms-implementation program. I stand for all those things.

Mr. President, the free governments of Europe, the United States, and Canada are all tied up with a single faith. We could not, if we would, cut ourselves loose from them. If democracy is to survive, the free nations which advocate democracy must stand together, must keep the faith, must carry out the programs designed to accomplish the survival of democracy and freedom, and which are designed to bring about the destruction of the evil and fatal policies of communism.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I do not disagree with what the able Senator from Texas has been stating in his capacity as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, but it seems to me—and I think it important to bring it up at this point—that the world is faced at the present time, as we are meeting here, with the necessity of having a united front—one that cannot be sabotaged—with the change which takes place tomorrow with Mr. Malik assuming the chairmanship of the Security Council?

It seems to me that the able Senator from Texas, the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and the State Department should be able to work out some method or propose some resolution whereby no person may assume the chairmanship of the Security Council without first taking an oath to support the action of the Security Council. To invite or permit Mr. Malik to gain the chairmanship by rotation is like permitting a member of the Capone crime syndicate to head the FBI. Certainly, if we are going to do these things which the able Senator from Texas has expounded, we should have some additional cooperation in keeping Mr. Malik from taking his seat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Texas has expired.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I yield two more minutes to the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized for two more minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from California. His ideas and mine have gone along pretty much together in regard to foreign problems. However, to do what the Senator from California suggests would probably require action by the United Nations. Whether that could be accomplished between now and tomorrow, when Mr. Malik takes over as President of the Security Council, would be doubtful. It would at least be a very difficult undertaking.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that I contacted Mr. Hickerson, of the State Department, this morning and pointed out that the President of the United States is not permitted to assume the Presidency until he has taken an oath to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. KNOWLAND. It seems to me that today the United Nations Security Council could adopt the resolution that no one could assume the chairmanship without agreeing to uphold and defend the Charter of the United Nations.

Mr. CONNALLY. I agree with the Senator from California, and if that can be accomplished, I hope that our representatives and others will advocate it. But, Mr. President, I do not view the return of Mr. Malik to the United Nations with any satisfaction whatever. I cannot believe that he is going to take the position as head of the Security Council for any good purpose, so far as the things recently done by the United Nations are concerned, or so far as its ultimate objectives are concerned. Mr. Malik is proposing to return to the Security Council for some strategic purpose. I trust that members of the Security Council will, while keeping their own counsel, see to it that he does not undermine the high purposes of the United Nations.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts for a question?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Does not the able Senator from Texas think that Mr. Malik has probably returned with the express purpose of confusing American public opinion and weakening our whole military effort?

Mr. CONNALLY. I agree with the Senator. I think his return is largely tied up with propaganda. Russia wants to pretend before the world that she is the peace advocate, and that the United States and Great Britain are the imperialists. I doubt not, as suggested by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, that Malik's purpose is not a good one, but that he is an emissary of confusion, distraction, and disturbance, which he hopes will spread throughout the world, as a part of Russia's propaganda methods.

I hope the Senate will reject the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. We cannot turn back on the course we have charted, at this particular juncture in world affairs. We want unity. We want the world to know that we stand just where we stood before—in unison with the free nations of western Europe. If Europe is to survive, if we are to survive, we must stand together for freedom and for democracy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Texas has expired.

The Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I can only wish that those of us who have opposed ECA from the beginning had been as successful in persuasion as we have been in prophecy.

I well remember that when the original bill was presented in this body the Senator from Texas raised his voice until the rafters of the Chamber resounded——

Mr. CONNALLY. There were no rafters in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. KEM. The Senator from Texas said, "We are voting for the peace of the world." ECA was sold to us as a policy of insurance against war.

I well remember, Mr. President, when the first bill was before us. Its proponents told the Senate, "You have two alternatives; either pass this bill or arm yourselves to the teeth." The Senate passed the bill. The ink was hardly dry on the President's signature when the administration was back again, presenting the largest war budget in the peacetime history of the United States. We voted for that budget. Then the administration came back again and said, "It is not sufficient to arm the people of the United States; we must arm the people of 12 nations of western Europe." So we did that. And so on and on and on.

Each prophecy has fallen short of performance. Each time it has been necessary for the majority leader and for the chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations to come back with additional proposals, each time involving the expenditure of vast sums of money. It would not have been so bad if we had the money to spend, but we have been mortgaging the future of the United States. We have been placing a lien on the Nation to be paid sometime, somehow, by our children and our children's children. All the time we have been causing an inflation which is rising like a great monster to plague us. The people suddenly find that the money backed by the credit of the United States in which they have had faith does not have the purchasing power that they thought it would have.

Mr. President, there is so much about the ECA bill that is based on a delusion that I do not know how to start discussing it. Much is said about the defense of western Europe, and it is contended that if we pass the bill we shall aid western Europe in defending itself. I have before me the budget estimate for July 1, 1950, to June 30, 1951, revised May 4, 1950. Running through the budget at random I see that the United Kingdom is to have 33 projects in 19 territories which call for specialized items of equipment from the United States to be used in improving basic economic conditions in the territories which will lead, in time, to further developmental activity.

I see that the Belgian Government is to have money for road building and development projects in the Congo.

France is to have money to improve roads, to open up new production areas in west and equatorial Africa and in the Cameroons, for the development of soil conservation in Algeria, rice production in Morocco, and for the development of iron deposits in French Guinea.

The Portuguese Government is to have money for the erection of a livestock utilization plant in Angola. Involved, among other things, would be a slaughterhouse, a byproducts plant, a quick-freeze cold-storage plant, a steam and power plant, and a cold-storage plant for the distribution of meat products. Approximately 6,000 metric tons of meat each year could be supplied to Brazzaville, Leopoldville, and other equatorial African markets, metropolitan Portugal, and the United Kingdom.

The Netherlands is to develop small farming projects in Dutch Guiana, to make possible the immigration of Dutch, Indo-Europeans, and possibly others to Surinam. In Surinam it is proposed to have a project involving the reclamation of 5,000 hectares of coastal land on which to raise rice and other products.

All of these projects are to be paid for by taxes on the American people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Missouri has expired.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE].

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I rise to announce that what I have recognized in the European recovery program has been a good investment of American dollars toward permanent peace, bringing to our side the support of the nations of western Europe in our attempt to establish permanent peace in the world.

The present Presiding Officer was with me on the visit which he and I were privileged to make to nations of western Europe. We traveled by car from Frankfurt across to Munich. We were in the company of 5 other Members of Congress who visited 13 nations of western Europe. We talked not only with farmers, small-business men, and corporation executives, but with men and women in the governments of those countries, and we commenced to sense that through the ECA and the Atlantic Pact we were rehabilitating the best citizens and restoring to the channels of commerce the hidden dollars of those nations. Yes, Mr. President, we were enlisting the best efforts of France, Italy, the Netherlands, the Scandinavian countries, Great Britain, and Greece in an attempt to try to rebuild their economies and their governments.

When we visited Norway we found the people very enthusiastic. They were rebuilding their fishing fleet, which meant so much to them; they were rebuilding their merchant marine, which meant much to their commerce. It was ECA dollars which made that possible.

Mr. President, when I returned to the United States, in speaking to citizens of my State I told them that I thought through ECA funds we had made a good start toward permanent and lasting peace.

I have in my hand a letter which I received today from Albert S. Goss, master of the National Grange. I shall quote only a few words from his letter. He says:

> ECA as a means of meeting the threat of communism has been an outstanding success. This is not alone the judgment of the National Grange, but is the unqualified conclusion of the four national farm organizations that inspected the work of ECA in May and June of this year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, may I have half a minute?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield half a minute to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the entire letter from Mr. Albert S. Goss printed at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL GRANGE,
Washington, D. C., July 31, 1950.

Hon. EDWARD J. THYE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR THYE: ECA as a means of meeting the threat of communism has been an outstanding success. This is not alone the judgment of the National Grange, but is the unqualified conclusion of the four national farm organizations that inspected the work of ECA in May and June of this year.

The elements of this outstanding success of ECA in checking aggressive communism are the identical elements needed to check it as the war becomes hotter. These elements are: (1) expanded industrial output of Europe; (2) agricultural production at least equal to that of prewar; and (3) a consequent faith among Europeans, and a fear among Communists that we are determined to continue unabated our opposition to communism through ECA.

The most important task of ECA, and the most difficult part of its task, lies ahead. We should not make the fatal mistake of reducing its funds at this critical stage below its full needs. We anticipate intensified Russian efforts in many parts of the world to divert us from our purpose of promoting sound European recovery before the job is completed. We hope that you will give full support to the continuation of this essential program.

Sincerely,

A. S. GOSS,
Master, the National Grange.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, as a Republican I rise to support the recommendations of the Appropriations Committee with respect to ECA, and I would quickly invite attention to these points:

Point No. 1 is that in my judgment the recommendations of the Appropriations Committee are in keeping with the spirit and intent of the great Republican platform of 1948 in which we pledged to the American people that we would keep partisanship at the water's edge, so far as foreign policy was concerned. In my judgment, any attempt to cut the heart out of the ECA program by the Kem amendments at this time cannot be reconciled with the spirit and intent of that plank of the Republican platform.

Point No. 2 is that it can now be stated that in February, March, and April, 1947, we were nearer to war than the American people realized. I speak as a member of the Armed Services Committee of the Senate. There were many of us in those critical months who expected the Russian troop movements which were westward in those days to take Trieste and Italy by force, if necessary. The Congress took some very quick action on two fronts to show Russia that we were willing to defend the peace. We proceeded with the appropriations necesary to strengthen our military defenses in Europe, and we proceeded with ECA. I happen to be one who believes that ECA, as much as has our military appropriations, strengthened our position in Europe. I am not on the floor of the Senate today going to cast a vote that will weaken the position of the allies we need in Europe in the critical months and years ahead, because I believe, Mr. President, that Russia will try to lick us——

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I shall not yield to the Senator from Missouri. I am talking about his amendment which I think is an undesirable amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. MORSE. I shall not vote for an amendment which would weaken, in my opinion, the strength of my Nation in the critical months ahead.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of State, dated July 27, 1950, and a letter from William Foster, Acting Administrator, Economic Cooperation Administration, dated July 27, 1950.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JULY 27, 1950.

The Honorable TOM CONNALLY,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR CONNALLY: I have read the letter which Mr. William C. Foster, Acting Administrator for the Economic Cooperation Administration, is forwarding you with respect to the importance of the appropriation for the European recovery program.

I concur completely in Mr. Foster's letter and wish to take this opportunity to endorse his statements to you.

You will recall that this question of the importance of ECA funds was raised when I appeared before the Foreign Relations Committee earlier this week. I should like to emphasize again that the mounting economic strength of western Europe is of paramount importance to the fulfillment of the policies which the United States Government has been pursuing. I cannot urge too strongly that the Congress take action to provide adequate funds to support this mounting strength.

Sincerely yours,

DEAN ACHESON.

ECONOMIC COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., July 27, 1950.

Hon. TOM CONNALLY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CONNALLY: It is expected that the Senate will vote very soon on the appropriation for the European recovery program. This vote and the amount to be appropriated take on new significance in view of the struggle in which we are now engaged.

I think it vital that certain considerations be emphasized in advance.

Vast new expenditures for military purposes are called for and in light of this circumstance all proposed appropriations must be strictly scrutinized so that resources can be husbanded for the most essential needs. But among such needs high priority must be given to the sums required for maintaining the economic strength of our friends and increasing their military strength as well.

It is important to recollect that early in 1948 the Communist threat to western Europe was a clear and present danger. The Marshall plan has not only so far prevented this threat from being translated into action, but has greatly increased the strength of western Europe to resist the danger. The continued need for world-wide strength to prevent further aggression and to preserve the peace is apparent.

It is this strength which the current vote on ECA will decisively affect. It is this strength which obviously must be made up out of the resources of the whole free world and not the United States alone. And the rest of the free world, particularly the free nations of western Europe, are now, as a result of Marshall aid, in a position to contribute substantially to that end.

What are the political, phychological, and economic changes in the OEEC nations that two and a quarter years with ERP aid have accomplished and which justify that statement?

Those changes include: A greatly increased industrial and agricultural production; an attainment of reasonable internal financial stability; a political stability allowing for freely chosen democratic governments with constantly declining totals of Communist voters; the sharp reduction of arbitrary restrictions on intra-European trade; the institution of the European Payments Union with its promise of convertibility within Europe; and a steadily growing belief by the people of Europe in their own future.

Without the assistance furnished by this country through the Foreign Assistance Act, this strong economic base could not have been built. And a strong economy and stable society is the foundation of military strength. In the months ahead, this economic base will have to bear a far heavier load as the free nations of western Europe build up their military strength. It is, therefore, more essential than ever that ECA assistance be continued so that the European economy can carry the load of rearmament, as well as contribute to the maintenance of a decent standard of living.

It is clear that such a continuation of ECA assistance, together with mutual defense assistance, will guarantee more security and a greater increase in military strength for each United States dollar that is spent than we could possibly achieve relying on United States production alone.

This multiplying effect has been demonstrated many times over the past 2 years in the industrial field. For example, electric power capacity in western Europe has vastly increased since April 1948. This increase results mainly from expansion of plants through capital investment, of which about 95 percent was contributed by the European countries themselves, and only 5 percent from ECA dollars. Yet without this 5 percent in dollars the development could not have been built. Similarly, in military items, though the ratio of total production to dollar investment may not be so dramatic, the effect of each dollar made available to Europe will be multiplied many times.

In this connection and because of our own military effort, question has been raised regarding future use of local currency counterpart funds. While it is clear that in some countries at least a portion of the counterpart could well be directed toward expanding facilities to be used for production of military equipment, there are many instances where present use of counterpart should be maintained best to help attain this new objective. For instance, where the major portion of a nation's counterpart is now being released for such purposes as development of electrical energy supply, improvement of basic transportation facilities, such as roads and railroads, or increasing the facilities of important seaports, these developments can contribute substantially and directly to increasing production for military purposes or to the movement of troops and supplies. It is true, moreover, that wise use of counterpart will further increase the multiplying effect to which I referred and our efforts will be directed to that end.

Up to this point the Marshall plan has been chiefly concerned with building resistance to communism within certain of the participating countries; from now on equal emphasis must also be given to building resistance to aggression from without. But in either case the proved principle of the Marshall plan is applicable; that American aid brings increased returns when coupled with self-help and mutual aid by the participating countries. On the other hand, withdrawal of adequate support by the United States would result in almost immediate economic disruption of the western European nations.

Therefore, I urge in the national interest and in order effectively to wage the peace, that you, Mr. Chairman, and the members of your committee, all of whom are so aware of these dangers, press for a fully adequate amount.

The Marshall plan is firmly identified in the European mind as the symbol of United States partnership in attaining peace and strength. Any sharp curtailment of Marshall aid might well be profoundly misunderstood as indicating a loss of United States interest in the economic stability of Europe. However, a further endorsement by the Senate will give confidence in the present and hope for the future to the entire free world.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM FOSTER,
Acting Administrator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate will proceed to vote on the pending question, which is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I have an amendment which I should like to offer at the proper time. It refers to the first section of chapter X–B, with reference to the Economic Cooperation Act as it now stands. Would I be precluded from offering an amendment to that section after action is taken on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's amendment would not be in order until the amendment proposing to change the figures is disposed of. After that is disposed of the Senator's amendment would be in order.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Anderson	Connally	Gillette
Benton	Cordon	Graham
Brewster	Douglas	Green
Bricker	Dworshak	Gurney
Bridges	Eastland	Hayden
Butler	Ellender	Hendrickson
Byrd	Ferguson	Hickenlooper
Capehart	Flanders	Hill
Chapman	Frear	Holland
Chavez	George	Humphrey

Ives	McClellan	Saltonstall
Johnson, Colo.	McFarland	Smith, Maine
Johnson, Tex.	McKellar	Smith, N. J.
Johnston, S. C.	Magnuson	Sparkman
Kefauver	Malone	Stennis
Kem	Martin	Taft
Kerr	Maybank	Thomas, Okla.
Knowland	Morse	Thye
Langer	Mundt	Tydings
Leahy	Murray	Watkins
Lehman	O'Conor	Wherry
Lodge	O'Mahoney	Williams
Lucas	Robertson	Young
McCarran	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present. The Chair will state the question before the Senate. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM] to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], inserting the figure $1,950,000,000, in lieu of $2,450,000,000, and striking out certain language on page 448, lines 2 and 8.

Mr. LUCAS and Mr. WHERRY requested the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY], the Senators from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE and Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is detained on official business.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER]. If present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay," and the Senator from Indiana would vote "yea."

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL]. If present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay," and the Senator from Kansas would vote "yea."

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. DARBY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. ECTON] is detained because of attendance at the funeral of a close personal friend and is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] who is absent by leave of the Senate. If present and voting, the Senator from Montana would vote "yea" and the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay."

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE]. If present and voting, the Senator from Indiana would vote "yea" and the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay."

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]. If present and voting, the Senator from Kansas would vote "yea" and the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 59, as follows:

So Mr. KEM's amendment to Mr. HAYDEN's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, my understanding is that I have 10 minutes on the amendment. I shall take but 5.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, with respect to the appropriation for ECA, I would like to point out how the committee arrived at the amount in the bill of $2,391,930,000. When we first considered the amount in the committee we voted on a figure of $2,500,000,000 as recommended by its chairman, the Senator from Tennessee, and the committee agreed to this figure on a vote of 11 to 10. Since many of the members of the committee who had voted against a figure of $2,500,000,000 had indicated they would support an appropriation of $2,450,000,000, the committee agreed to have a roll-call vote on the lesser amount. I made the motion to reconsider. I did not feel it would be desirable to have the committee recommending an appropriation which had been agreed to in the committee by a margin of only one vote. On the vote in the committee on an amount of $2,450,000,000 for ECA there were 17 yeas and 3 nays. So the committee had by a substantial majority recommended an appropriation of $2,450,000,000.

Several days later, on July 7, 1950, when the committee was in session considering other chapters of the bill, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] made a motion that all items in the foreign-aid chapter which had not been cut at least 10 percent under the budget estimate be cut 10 percent under the budget estimate, exclusive of the funds for mutual defense assistance. The committee voted on the motion of the Senator from Michigan, and it carried by a vote of 11 to 10. This meant that ECA would be further reduced by $58,070,000 to allow an appropriation of $2,391,930,000. This is how the figure was arrived at.

The following day when the committee was again in session one of the members of the committee who had voted in favor of the Ferguson motion stated he was willing to move to reconsider and restore the amount to $2,450,000,000, as originally adopted by a vote of 17 to 3. It was agreed not to do this, since the report had already been printed, and the matter could be considered further on the Senate floor.

In view of this background, and especially in view of the fact that the figure in the bill of $2,391,930,000 was agreed upon by such a close vote, I move that, on page 447, line 18, the figure "$2,391,930,000" be stricken and the figure "$2,450,000,000" be inserted in lieu thereof, as approved by our committee by 17 out of the 20 members.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. WHERRY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY], the Senators from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE and Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER]. If present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia would vote "yea," and the Senator from Indiana would vote "nay."

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Montana [Mr. ECTON]. If present and voting, the Senator from Pennsylvania would vote "yea," and the Senator from Montana would vote "nay."

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL]. If present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia would vote "yea," and the Senator from Kansas would vote "nay."

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS] is paired on this vote with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY]. If present and voting, the Senator from Kentucky would vote "yea," and the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay."

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] would vote "yea."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE]. If present and voting, the Senator from Indiana would vote "nay" and the Senator from West Virginia would vote "yea."

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]. If present and voting, the Senator from Kansas would vote "nay" and the Senator from West Virginia would vote "yea."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS]. If present and voting, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay" and the Senator from Kentucky would vote "yea."

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] is detained on official business.

So Mr. HAYDEN'S amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now before the Senate is on the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the economic cooperation provision and ask to have it stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 448, line 17, following the colon after the word "amended", it is proposed to insert the following: "Provided further, That after November 1, 1950, no funds herein appropriated shall be made available to any nation of which a dependent area fails to comply with any treaty to which the United States and such dependent area are parties."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, on last Friday, shortly following the adoption of the unanimous-consent agreement to vote today, at a time when at least I and a number of other Senators were of the firm opinion that no particular action was to be had on the economic cooperation section of the bill on last Friday, a point of order was raised to that portion of economic cooperation provision beginning after the word "amended" on line 17, on page 448, striking the remainder of that particular section.

Mr. President, it was my intention to discuss any point of order that might be to that particular section, but I did not have the opportunity to do so because I was at a meeting at that time and had not anticipated that such action would be taken then. Business has transpired since the point of order was raised, and I understand under the precedents that an appeal cannot now be taken from the ruling on that point of order.

I therefore had prepared the amendment which I have sent to the desk, and, as it states, it provides "that after November 1, 1950, no funds herein appropriated shall be made available to any nation of which a dependent area fails to comply with any treaty to which the United States and such dependent area are parties."

Anticipating a point of order, Mr. President, I should like to say that I have tried to check the amendment as best I can with the authorities, and the best advice I can secure is that unless new duties are imposed upon some administrative official, such as the Department of State, then the amendment is in order, and I think, that no new duties are imposed upon any official, especially in view of the Connally amendment to the authorization act this spring, which specifically provides: "In any case where the Department of State determines that such discriminatory restriction is maintained or imposed," and so forth.

Mr. President, because I am limited as to time, I should like to have the entire Connally amendment, which is found on page 3 of Public Law 535, the print I have in my hand, in subsection (n), printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(n) It is the sense of Congress that no participating country shall maintain or impose any import, currency, tax, license, quota, or other similar business restrictions which discriminate against citizens of the United States or any corporation, partnership, or other association substantially beneficially owned by citizens of the United States, engaged or desiring to engage, in furtherance of the purposes of this title, in the importation into such country of any commodity, which restrictions are not reasonably required to meet the balance of payments conditions, or requirements of national security, or are not authorized under international agreements to which such country and the United States are parties. In any case where the Department of State determines that any such discriminatory restriction is maintained or imposed by a participating country or by any dependent area of such country, the Administrator shall take such remedial action as he determines will effectively promote the purposes of this subsection (n).

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I have only 5 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa declines to yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, my amendment will particularly affect the inexcusable and unconscionable violation of the rights of American citizens in Morocco. I opposed the insertion of such an amendment last year based upon the solemn promises of the State Department and of the ECA that they would, under the power which they already have under the ECA Act and which is admitted by Mr. Hoffman and the State Department, correct these abuses and see that American citizens doing business in Morocco secure equal, fair, and equitable treatment with other nationals and in full accordance with treaties which are in existence between this country and Morocco. In spite of its promises and in spite of its solemn assurances, the ECA has wholly and completely failed to take action. In spite of the admonition of the Connally amendment this spring, the ECA has done nothing to correct these abuses. In spite of the fact that the State Department itself has repeatedly said in writing that Morocco is violating its treaty with the United States, so far as American nationals are concerned, the abuses continue.

So, Mr. President, I no longer feel constrained to take the word of the State Department or to trust the assurances of the ECA that it will correct the manifest injustices which I think every Member of the Senate knows exists.

I dislike the necessity of putting in the bill a mandatory clause of this kind, but it is the only way by which to get action by the State Department and the ECA—which not only is charged from the standpoint of its patriotism, but is directly charged under the Connally amendment of this spring, with taking action to correct those abuses. However, those two great departments have wholly and utterly failed and refused to do anything to correct them.

Mr. President, I have supported ECA, and I am still supporting ECA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HAYDEN. Is the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa in order until the committee amendment in line 18 has been adopted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. My amendment is an amendment to perfect the committee amendment, which we agreed will be treated as though it were the text of the bill. I think I am entitled to have a final decision on that question of the adoption of my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa is offered as an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, is not this amendment subject to a point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No point of order has been made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order, because it seems to the Chair that the amendment is a limitation on the appropriation, based upon the provisions of the ECA Act, as passed by the Congress, and with particular reference to what is known as the Connally amendment to that act, which stipulates that it is the duty of the Department of State to consider and determine whether there has been any violation of a treaty agreement. The amendment merely provides that if there has been such a violation, the appropriation shall not be available. The Chair thinks the amendment is a limitation, and overrules the point of order.

This question is subject to debate for 5 minutes by any Senator who desires to occupy that time.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, how much time is available?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Five minutes is available to any Senator who wishes to discuss this question.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on the amendment, I wish to read one or two paragraphs from the letter of the Acting Administrator of ECA in regard to the amendment:

In the first place, I believe that the proviso is wholly unnecessary. It is adopted from an amendment proposed to and rejected by the Congress this year in the course of considering the authorizing legislation for ECA. At that time it was pointed out that a procedure had been established in Morocco last December for consultation between American and French authorities to deal with complaints of discrimination against American businessmen. Since that time almost all the specific complaints concerning such discrimination have been brought before the consultative group. An investigation just completed on the ground in Morocco shows that this new procedure, which involved some delays in its early stages, has been speeded up considerably within the last 6 weeks and that the majority of the complaints of the American businessmen have been satisfied. This consultative machinery makes it possible for cases of discrimination to be established and identified, and the authority expressed in the Connally amendment to the ECA Act enables the Administrator for Economic Cooperation to take such action, including suspension of dollar assistance or refusal to release franc funds, as is suited to the particular situation.

In the second place the proviso would, in its operations, be seriously damaging. It would, of course, be wholly contrary to the basic theory that the program is based on cooperation among the free countries and not on coercion by the United States, but quite apart from this, the actual operation of the proviso would be ruinous to the carrying out of the recovery program for France, for it is at France that the provision is directed. As I have noted above, ECA is now in a position to deal with discriminations against American businessmen, taking such measures as are best suited to meet and cure the discrimination complained of.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I should simply like to say to the Senator, if I may do so, that without passing at all on the justice or the injustice of the situation or the question of whether the State Department has been sufficiently diligent in connection with this matter, it seems to me that the amendment goes against one feature of the Economic Cooperation Act, a feature which is vital to the entire conception of ECA, namely, that the recipient nations under the Marshall plan must get all their imports from soft currency areas, wherever it is possible to do so—whereas this amendment would require that France get imports in dollar areas. If we once admit that principle, then the entire ECA Act is in danger of being converted into a subsidy for American products.

For that reason, I intend to oppose the amendment, although I am quite prepared to admit that the State Department has been dilatory in dealing with this subject.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. President, I read further from the letter of the acting Administrator of the Economic Cooperation Administration:

The suggested proviso would go far beyond this and might require a complete cessation of aid to the whole French Union, a sanction wholly out of proportion to the circumstances. The proposed amendment to the authorizing legislation, which was rejected by the Congress, would have operated to freeze the entire franc counterpart fund. The present proviso is apparently designed with the same sanction in mind. However, presumably in an effort to justify its inclusion in an appropriation bill, it has been recast so as to affect the expenditure of appropriated dollars as well. Hence it might operate to shut off all aid in an effort to insure that no local currency counterpart fund can be created for the ultimate benefit of the French recovery effort. This would be an even more drastic penalty and one directly opposed to the whole spirit and purpose of the Marshall plan.

Mr. President, this amendment is directed at France. France is in the throes of economic recovery. France is in a perilous condition, so far as the world situation is concerned. Surely the Congress does not want to do anything which would adversely affect France in her economic recovery at this particular time. So I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Is the Senator from Illinois aware that last year I went along with the exact position which is set forth in the letter the Senator from Illinois has been reading, doing so based upon the promises of the State Department and of the ECA that they would correct the situation and that they had the power to correct it?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I know nothing about that, and I do not know whether the State Department has been diligent or has not been diligent.

My point is that if the acting Administrator of the ECA is correct in the letter I have been reading, which he has sent to the Senator from Texas—so far as the amendment is concerned—and I believe he is correct—then if we are going to cripple France at this stage of the game in her economic recovery, by means of adopting an amendment of this kind, we shall be striking a serious blow, in my opinion, against the entire Marshall-plan recovery program.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois—because a year ago I felt that there was some validity to the point made by the State Department—whether he believes that even the ECA Act can set aside a treaty which has been ratified between two sovereign governments, and, of course, in that connection ratified by the Senate of the United States, or whether the Senator believes that any law can set aside a treaty.

Mr. LUCAS. No; I do not agree at all that a law can set aside a treaty.

But I say, and repeat what I said a moment ago, that regardless of any technical arguments which might be made about the treaty aspect of the case, we are in a rather serious situation. Regardless of any technicalities which might be raised with respect to whether or not a treaty has been violated or has not been violated, it seems to me that in this case we should rely upon the word of the acting Administrator, when he says definitely that this amendment will injure the recovery program in France. Certainly if we injure the recovery program in France, we shall be doing a disservice to the entire ECA program and shall be impairing it.

This is the time, it seems to me, when we ought to stand firmly back of the ECA program and should defeat amendments which would in anywise cripple it in any part whatever. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] to the committee amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] is detained on official business.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY], the Senators from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE and Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS] are absent by leave of the Senate.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. DARBY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] are absent by leave of the Senate. If present and voting, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL] would vote "yea."

The Senator from Montana [Mr. ECTON] is detained because of attendance at the funeral of a close personal friend and if present would vote "yea."

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY] is necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 29, as follows:

So Mr. HICKENLOOPER's amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have offered an amendment to the committee amendment, which has been printed, and which is lettered "E." I desire to call up the amendment at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 448, line 24, it is proposed to strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That, during any period during which the Armed Forces of the United States are actively engaged in hostilities while carrying out any decision of the Security Council of the United Nations, no part of the funds appropriated in this paragraph shall be used to provide assistance to any participating country which exports or permits the exportation, to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics or any of its satellite countries (including China and Northern Korea), of any article or commodity usable by, or which may be used in the manufacture of any article or commodity which may be useful to, the armed forces of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics or such satellite countries."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not desire to use all my time now. The amendment has been discussed. If there is to be opposition, I should be glad later to use the time allotted me. If there is no opposition to the amendment, I am ready to vote on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the committee amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WHERRY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Anderson	Bridges	Chapman
Benton	Butler	Chavez
Brewster	Byrd	Connally
Bricker	Capehart	Cordon
Douglas	Johnson, Colo.	Morse
Dworshak	Johnson, Tex.	Mundt

Ives	Maybank	Young

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY].

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HAYDEN. My point of order is that the amendment as offered imposes additional duties on ECA in that it must find that some countries which would be entitled to the benefits of the recovery program are exporting or permitting the exportation to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics of any article or commodity which may be useful to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics or satellite countries. It would impose a duty upon the Administrator which is not now authorized by law.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, before the Chair rules with reference to the point raised I should like to modify the amendment by inserting in line 10, after the word "including" the word "Communist" so that it will read "Communist China and Northern Korea." The word "Communist" is not now included in the amendment. I should like to modify it in that respect.

Mr. President, is the point of order made by the Senator from Arizona open for consideration?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is. It lies in the discretion of the Chair.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, section 117 (d) of the basic act provides:

> The Administrator is directed to refuse delivery insofar as practicable to participating countries of commodities which go into the production of any commodity for delivery to any nonparticipating European country which commodity would be refused export licenses to those countries by the United States in the interest of national security. Whenever the Administrator believes that the issuance of a license for the export of any commodity to any country wholly or partly in Europe which is not a participating country is inconsistent with the purposes and provisions of this title, he shall so advise the department, agency, or officer in the executive branch of the Government exercising the authority with respect to such commodity granted to the President by section 6 of the act of July 2, 1940 (54 Stat. 714), as amended, and, if differences of view are not adjusted by consultation, the matter shall be referred to the President for final decision.

The next section deals with the termination of assistance.

Mr. President, the watchdog committee, on page 16 of its report, stated very emphatically as follows:

The problem confronting Congress is the fact that after nearly 2 years the wholehearted cooperation of the European countries receiving American aid in controlling east-west trade has not been obtained. It presumably could be obtained if section 117 (d) were strengthened by directing the Administrator to withhold economic assistance from all countries which do not satisfy him that they have put into effect controls which prevent shipments of goods to the iron-curtain areas, which the United States itself does not permit.

In this connection it must recognized that this problem might fall more directly into the sphere of the North Atlantic Treaty and its administration. Nevertheless, certain countries receive economic assistance which do not participate in the foreign military-assistance program. The fundamental question then remains as to whether American dollars should go to countries which do not carry out our policies concerning trade with the Soviet-dominated countries.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The argument should go to the point of order, not to the merits.

Mr. WHERRY. I am arguing the point of order, Mr. President. In carrying out the recommendations made by the watchdog committee there is a limitation as to what the money can be spent for if the policy is not carried out. Therefore, it is not legislation in an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would like to ask the Senator a question.

The watchdog committee report suggests an amendment to the basic act, which has not been ratified by Congress.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand. However, I say that that is the basis for this amendment, which is not an affirmative amendment but a limitation upon an appropriation bill, requiring that no assistance be given to countries which do not carry out in principle what is inherent in the basic act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is trying to ask a question on the point of order. Does the Senator concede or does he take the position or is it his opinion that the adoption of the amendment would impose additional duties on the Administrator of the ECA or anyone connected with it?

Mr. WHERRY. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would like to hear the Senator on that point.

Mr. WHERRY. That is required under the basic act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator point to the language in the basic act which requires such action?

Mr. WHERRY. Section 117 (d).

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator read it again?

Mr. WHERRY. Section 117 (d) provides:

The Administrator is directed to refuse delivery, insofar as practicable, to participating countries of commodities which go into the production of a commodity for delivery to any nonparticipating European country which commodity would be refused export licenses to those countries by the United States in the interest of national security.

The section continues in provision after provision with respect to what the Administrator shall do. It is my opinion that the Administrator has not done it, even though it is provided for in the basic act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Would not those articles be subject to refusal of export licenses?

Mr. WHERRY. The difficulty is not primarily with export licenses issued here. The difficulty is that the Administrator is not requiring the same precaution in export licenses from ECA countries to Russia. Therefore I am asking that the provision of the basic act be carried out insofar as licenses to those countries are concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is undertaking to determine under the basic act which shipments from cooperating countries to noncooperative countries are in such category that export licenses would not be granted for the shipment of those specific article into a noncooperating country.

Mr. WHERRY. The basic provision is that licenses shall be refused by the Administrator for the same articles for which we refuse export licenses in America in direct shipments to Russia or satellite countries.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the point regarding which the Chair is making inquiry. What identical articles are involved in this amendment on which our country would not issue export licenses?

Mr. WHERRY. They are all strategic articles, on which a board passes. The Secretary of Commerce sits on that board. The Defense Department is also represented. In the past 6 weeks the board has begun to tighten up on many of these strategic materials, such as oil, which are finding their way into satellite countries.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I should like to point out that in reading the report of the watchdog committee the Senator from Nebraska has indicated that the committee recommended that the basic law be changed or modified, and that is what his amendment seeks to do. In other words, he is seeking to legislate.

Mr. WHERRY. Oh, no.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is listening to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. The "watchdog committee" clearly indicates that the law as it now stands is not satisfactory to the committee, and that it should be changed. That is what the Senator from Nebraska is trying to do. The law which he quoted states that the Administrator shall, so far as practicable, do certain things. The Senator would specifically require the Administrator to do those things whether he believed them to be practicable or not.

Mr. WHERRY. I respectfully disagree with my colleague from Arizona. I again call attention to the fact that I read the basic act, section 117 (d), which sets forth what we are attempting to do here——

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator has read from the report of the "watchdog committee."

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator let me finish? In support of the fact that I felt there was need for this amendment I quoted from the "watchdog committee" report. The Senator from Nebraska knows that a legislative act can be amended. The Senator from Nebraska is not attempting to write legislation into an appropriation bill, any more than the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] was attempting to legislate in an appropriation bill. I propose a restriction or a limitation in an appropriation which has been written into the law already.

The Senator from Nebraska is on sound ground so far as the amendment is concerned. If the Senator from Arizona does not agree with it, that is another thing. Certainly the point of order does not lie against my amendment if we proceed on the established precedents. It is restriction on a legislative act, which does not call for affirmative action beyond what is already provided in the act itself. That is the reason I read the act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A limitation on an appropriation, if it changes an existing law or imposes additional duties on an administrative officer, would not necessarily be in order. The question before the Chair is not an easy one to decide. The question before the Chair is whether this restriction imposes any additional duties upon the Administrator of the ECA or any other officer with respect to the satellite countries, the Soviet Union, Communist China, or North Korea.

The Chair would like to take a little time to consult the Parliamentarian with respect to that question, because the Chair is undecided about it.

Mr. LUCAS. May I say a word on the point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. The basic act, as read by the Senator from Nebraska, definitely states that the Administrator shall do certain things insofar as practicable. I emphasize the words "insofar as practicable." Under the Senator's amendment the Administrator is directed to do certain things. When that direction or authorization is added to the duties of the Administrator we are giving additional duties to him which he did not have under the basic act. In other words, he can take certain action now, so far as practicable, in connection with the disposition of certain articles from one country to another. The decision is up to him. Under the Senator's amendment the Administrator would be compelled to do certain things whether he wanted to do them or not. Certainly that would involve the imposition of additional duties.

Mr. WHERRY. May I say another word before the Chair makes his decision?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will listen to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I maintain that the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Nebraska narrows the act. The present provisions of section 117 (d) are very much broader than what the junior Senator from Nebraska is attempting to do with his amendment. All that the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska would do would be to withhold funds from countries which have not conformed to the provisions of the basic act with regard to strategic materials only. The basic act is much broader. It applies to all commodities which go into the production of any commodity for delivery, and so forth. All I am asking for is enforcement of the act with respect to strategic materials, because if we cannot get compliance on the broader scale, certainly we want it on strategic materials, because the time is here when all of us ought to be unanimous in directing the Administrator to refuse to permit strategic materials such as oil to be sent to ECA countries and then to be sold by them to satellite countries or to Russia, to be used against our boys. The Senator from Nebraska is narrowing the obligations of the Administrator to apply only to strategic materials. If the Administrator had complied with the provisions of the act there would be no need for the amendment of the junior Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word on the question of the limitation. It is fundamental that a limitation is purely negative. It cannot direct, it cannot enlarge, it cannot change the responsibilities or the duties of the administrator under the original provision. So that if the pending amendment in any wise adds to the duties or the obligations of the Administrator, it is out of order. That is all I care to say.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The basic act provides that the ECA Administrator shall act "so far as practicable." That gives him discretion to determine whether it is practicable to supply to the countries concerned goods which may be exported by them to nonparticipating countries and used for the manufacture of arms or supplies which might be useful to them in any conflict with us. That is the effect of it.

The amendment probably requires the ECA Administrator to be a little more alert in carrying out that duty. The Chair thinks that the basic Act would prevent him from providing any assistance to a country which shipped or permitted the shipment of any goods to Russia or a satellite country which might be used by them in any military operation against us. That gives the Administrator considerable discretion and latitude, whereas the amendment probably restricts his discretion, and makes it more mandatory for him to do these things.

The Chair does not see any "fatal infirmity," as Chief Justice Hughes once described a law on which he was passing, between the amendment and the basic law, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY]. Five minutes may be used by any Senator who desires to speak against the amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS] are absent by leave of the Senate.

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] would vote "yea."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. DARBY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] are absent by leave of the Senate. If present and voting, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL] would each vote "yea."

The Senator for Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY] is necessarily absent.

So Mr. WHERRY's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I call up my amendment lettered "B" of July 28, 1950, to the committee amendment, and ask to have it stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 448, line 24, it is proposed to strike out the period at the end of the sentence and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided further, That in carrying out the purposes of the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948, as amended, the President shall encourage the cooperating nations to forgive indebtedness incurred with one another during World War II, or to delay payments on such indebtedness for so long a period as United States assistance shall be required for the debtor nation."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I will take 3½ minutes of my 5 minutes myself.

During World War II the United States Government extended $48,700,000,000 in grants and credits to its allies, the major portion of which was in lend-lease.

In the same period other nations extended minor credits to allied nations to carry out the successful prosecution of the war.

The United States looks for repayment of only minor sums out of the vast amount of World War II aid extended. Where it seeks repayment at all, it has been most willing to grant indefinite delay so as to occasion no hardship to former allies.

As we now undertake economic aid and the rearming of several nations in the mutual-defense assistance program, this Nation finds that some of the receiving nations are saddled with relatively heavy debts incurred during World War II for military supplies.

Great Britain, for instance, extended aid to the Netherlands, France, Greece, and Turkey during World War II. Now it seeks repayment of these wartime loans. Other nations, likewise, extended World War II credits.

It would seem only just that repayment of World War II indebtedness should be postponed during such time as the United States is called upon to equip debtor nations with military supplies or furnish economic aid.

The nations that have been aided so generously by the United States Government ought now to be lenient to nations that contracted military debts in the last war.

Repayment of World War II military debts at this time may retard the recovery of a debtor nation or delay military preparedness needed now.

Turkey, for instance, owes Great Britain approximately £30,000,000. This amount is not large in the British economy. It represents a major obligation in terms of the Turkish economy. The gold reserves of Turkey have been drawn down from approximately $208,000,000 in 1947 to approximately $165,000,000 today. We are called on to aid Turkey, both through ECA and through military assistance.

At the same time we are aiding Great Britain.

It seems to me that in carrying out the provisions of economic assistance or of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949 we ought to encourage the forgiveness or postponement of World War II debts contracted between participating nations because, in the end, the money comes from the United States, anyway.

This amendment does not direct the President to take any action that would interfere in any way with the sovereignty of other nations. It does not require him to impose any intolerable burden upon any other nation. It only expresses the sense of Congress that he should encourage nations receiving our aid to lessen the load which debtor nations carry today because of credits extended during the wartime period.

In effect the amendment merely asks the President to use his good offices to see if this can be brought about. I think it is a sound thing because, if we are aiding Turkey, and she owes money to Great Britain, and if Great Britain is pressing Turkey for collection, then certainly the money will come out of the United States both ways.

Therefore, I think the amendment is very sound.

I yield 1 minute to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT].

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, I want to associate myself with the views expressed by the Senator from New Hampshire, pointing out that this is not a mandate on the part of the Senate, but this is an effort on our part by amendment which asks the President to encourage our associates in ECA to give the same kind of treatment to other countries in the Marshall-plan program with regard to World War II indebtedness that we in the United States ourselves are extending to our associates in the Marshall-plan program. It seems to me that is simply injecting an element of realism into this whole business. The amendment simply assures that each of the members of the Marshall-plan program shall receive the same consideration from other creditor countries as the United States, in turn, has extended to such creditor nations as are debtor nations, insofar as our own books are concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD to the point of concluding my sentence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I yield the next half minute to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON].

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, as I view the amendment I see in it only a direction for cooperation. It is quite in the spirit of all the things we are trying to do with our allies and our friends the world over. I think the amendment is entitled to the support of every Member of this body.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I hardly know what the amendment means. I do not, of course, intend to cast any reflection on my friend from New Hampshire. It seems to require the President to do something which is certainly not in order on this appropriation bill, as I believe, and I make a point of order against it. The idea of our asking other nations to forgive each other their debts is remarkable indeed. Such a provision certainly ought not to be on an appropriation bill which authorizes so much money to be given to other nations. By this bill we are appropriating money for certain foreign nations. The Senator's amendment would ask other nations to forgive debts owing to them. How can we ever expect to collect any of the money we have loaned other nations or given to other nations after we make a statement such as is proposed by the amendment? It seems to me the amendment is subject to a point of order. If it is not subject to a point of order, it ought to be voted down, and I hope it will be voted down, and not put in the bill.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator understands, does he not, that we are advancing money to Turkey for economic aid and military aid, for example. If Turkey is being forced by Great Britain to pay old war debts, similar to war debts owing to us and such as we have in large part forgiven, it will only mean that we will be furnishing money to Great Britain, and then she will get more money by siphoning off some we provide for Turkey. The amendment does not direct the President to do anything. It simply asks him to use his good offices to stop demands for payments owing to them.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator feels as he does with respect to forgiveness of debt, why does he not introduce a bill covering that point? Why does he propose to hang such an amendment onto this appropriation bill? It seems to me the amendment is out of place in every sense of the word. I believe it is not in order on an appropriation bill, and I hope the Chair will hold that it is not in order. If the Chair does not hold that it is not in order, I hope the Senate will vote down the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. The amendment does not limit the appropriation carried in the bill. But it does issue a direction to the President of the United States to encourage the cooperating nations to forgive indebtedness incurred with one another during World War II, or to delay the payments of such indebtedness so long as we are furnishing money to any of these countries. Presumably the President could by negotiation, by taking up an issue of that sort with the other nations, encourage them to do that thing. But he is not required to do it. It is entirely within his own judgment as to whether or not he shall undertake it.

This amendment says he shall do it; therefore, he is directed by the amendment to proceed with negotiations with all these countries, to see whether they will forgive the indebtedness to them by other countries or postpone its payment.

The Chair thinks that amounts to issuing to the President of the United States a directive that is not contemplated by any present law. Therefore the point of order is sustained.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, in order to be consistent, I appeal from the Chair's decision on the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question.]

The "ayes" appear to have it; the "ayes" have it, and the Chair's ruling on the point of order is sustained.

The committee amendment is open to further amendment.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I call up the amendment to the committee amendment which I have sent to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 448 of the committee amendment, before the period in line 24, it is proposed to insert a comma and the following proviso: "Provided further, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be used to provide assistance to any participating country which, in the opinion of the President, has failed, refused, or neglected to support the United Nations in the Korean war by supplying armed personnel, materials of war, or services."

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, this amendment to the committee amendment is very plain in its purpose and in its direction. Today we are in a war. It may be called a police action; but to the men who are fighting and dying over there in Korea, trying to stop that Communist aggression and conquest, it is war. Officially it is a war of the United Nations, but with the United States doing the fighting. That is the situation up to this hour.

Other members of the United Nations have been called upon to furnish assistance in fighting personnel, materials, and services. Some of them have most modestly responded; others have done nothing as yet to assist. There has not been up to now the enthusiastic response and support which is necessary and that we have the right to expect and demand.

I do not believe we should be expected to spend millions of dollars, nor should we tolerate it, to build up the economy of any country participating in the ECA program if that country is able and should fail or refuse, as a member of the United Nations, to furnish either fighting personnel, war materials, or services in this conflict.

This amendment to the committee amendment simply provides that if any country participating in and a recipient of ECA founds fails, refuses, or neglects to furnish either fighting personnel, war materials, or services, then, when such country fails to do so, if in the President's opinion that country could do so, the President in his discretion can stop the spending of ECA funds in that country and for that government.

Mr. President, that should be done. That is all the amendment to the committee amendment provides. It is not compulsory; it leaves the matter to the discretion of the President of the United States.

Someone has said, "We ought not say that now out loud; that we should tell them that in a whisper when we give them the money."

Well, Mr. President, let us tell it to them now in the language of this bill. Let us whisper it loud enough so that when the President says, "Give us some help," these countries will know that the Congress of the United States is back of the President, giving him our moral support, and that the Congress and the people of this Nation do not want this ECA money—which is appropriated by us to help in the fight against communism—to be spent in countries which will not, when the crisis, the real test comes, stand up and be counted in the fight against communism.

That is all there is to the amendment.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield 1 minute to the junior Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I wish enthusiastically to support and endorse in full the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas to the committee amendment.

The battle call has already been sounded; it was sounded more than a month ago. Our men are actually fighting and dying on the battle line. The blue-and-white flag of the United Nations has been unfurled, representing a new forward step in international affairs. However, we are the only country whose men are actually fighting and giving their blood and dying on the battle line.

The operation of the amendment will not be arbitrary, for it leaves discretion with the President. There is plenty of time to put the amendment into operation, and there is plenty of time for these nations to have advance notice.

It seems to me that this is the test; this is it.

All these years we have been charged with having been the cause of the failure of the League of Nations. Now we have taken a leading part in the United Nations, and today we are on the battle line.

So it seems to me that this is the test; and no one who is acting in good faith in connection with the recovery program can object to this step.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I wish to endorse wholeheartedly the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to the committee amendment.

Today we have a new kind of citizenship—citizenship in the United Nations. Every member of the United Nations is in effect a citizen of the United Nations, and in time of war they can be classified only one way or the other: they are either for the new nation of which they are a citizen or they are against it. In a case of this sort, when a country gives aid and comfort to the enemy, that country is guilty of treason, to all effects and purposes.

I think the time has come when the people of the United States, through their Senate and their House of Representatives, should speak and be heard as advising the President that we expect that the citizens of the United Nations, the members of the United Nations, will take either one side or the other in the great conflict now going on in Korea, the aggression of the North Koreans against the South Koreans. In this conflict, all nations who are members of the United Nations must demonstrate that they are either for or against the United Nations. Those who give aid and comfort against the United Nations are in effect themselves guilty of acts of aggression. They should not be given aid by the United States of America when we are trying to fight communism not only in Korea but in other parts of the world.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I am glad to yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on the amendment, I ask that it be again stated by the clerk, so that all Senators will understand it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas wants the amendment again stated by the clerk, and I yield that much time—if it does not take all the remaining time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will restate the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 448, before the period in line 24, it is proposed to insert a comma and the following: "Provided further, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be used to provide assistance to any participating country which, in the opinion of the President, has failed, refused, or neglected to support the United Nations in the Korean War by supplying armed personnel, materials of war, or services."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wonder whether the Senator from Arkansas would be willing to let the amendment go to conference, to be considered there. I think it is subject to a point of order, but if the Senator is willing to let it go to conference, we will accept it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I thank the able Senator. Of course, it will have to go to conference, and I am perfectly willing that it go to conference. But I hope it will be retained in this bill.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Tennessee that the amendment is subject to a point of order. However, the Senator from Illinois will not raise the point. I do not raise it because I am confident that the Senator from Arkansas, in this amendment, is facing in the right direction so far as the United Nations organization is concerned, and insofar as all men who believe in the free way of life are concerned.

I should like to advise the Senate that, at the first meeting we had with the President of the United States, the Cabinet, and high members of the military, the Army and the Navy, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and I, at that very first meeting, advocated this very thing. We thought it was very necessary that all nations partiicpating in the United Nations organization show their good will and their intention of going along with us by doing something along this line. Since that time, the nations have indicated their willingness to help, and I think it is a source of something really worth while for the United Nations and the free world to have all these nations doing something which they can do for the free world, something which indicates that they are with us in this fight. That is what the Senator from Arkansas is aiming to accomplish, by giving the President the power to do the things enumerated.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I merely want the other countries to know that we are furnishing this money, and that the eyes of America are upon them. We want to know whether they are ready to stand up and be counted to the extent of their ability, whenever a crisis comes. If not, I do not favor spending time or money with them.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LUCAS. In a moment. I should like to make a further observation with respect to certain countries sending military and other forms of aid. We must realize, when we think of the 59 nations of different languages and different types of munitions, and so forth, so far as military aid from them is concerned, it could become a liability rather than an asset. At the same time, they can furnish materials or articles that will be of aid in connection with this crisis. They could send troops, even though they could not speak our language, to be used for example in bringing out those who are wounded, or for certain kinds of field duty, or to do something in the rear of the front lines, so far as menial services are concerned. I think that is what the American people desire.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is what we want.

Mr. LUCAS. This is a step in the right direction, and I certainly shall not object to it.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. STENNIS. The Senator from Illinois says there have been promises and expectations held out. Will the Senator be more specific? We have promises, but the only things that are definite I think are that Turkey is sending, or offering to send, 4,500 trained combat troops; Thailand, 4,000 soldiers; and Bolivia, 30 officers.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not know what 30 officers from Bolivia could do in Korea.

Mr. STENNIS. I am not referring particularly to them. But let us be as specific as we can as to what has actually been put on the line, or sent, or representations made that it will be sent at any particular time.

Mr. LUCAS. It is my understanding that England is now preparing to send 6,000 infantrymen, engineers, and artillery. They will all be foot soldiers. It is my understanding Australia is sending foot soldiers, and that another nation is probably sending some.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I shall yield in a moment. I am now quoting from memory, but I know that there are countries which have expressed a willingness to do what is being suggested here. The more we can discuss it and the more the Congress becomes interested in such a program, the better it will be for our own country, and the better for all the peoples concerned.

Mr. STENNIS. Does not the Senator think that the subject ought to be debated more at length, and that it is unfortunate when it comes up under the 10-minute rule?

Mr. LUCAS. I might debate it at great length, and go along with everything said in furtherance of it. I now yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

ASSISTANCE FROM AUSTRALIA—EDITORIAL FROM THE SYDNEY DAILY TELEGRAPH

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I received by air mail from Australia an editorial which appeared in one of the leading Australian papers. I think it is a splendid editorial. It points up what the people of Australia should do. They should back up the United States, now that the United States is asking for support in the United Nations, or through the United Nations organization. And, Mr. President, because the discussion relates directly to what nations should do in support of the United Nations and the United States in this Korean crisis, it seems to me that this editorial would be very timely, if it were permitted to be printed in the body of the RECORD as part of the discussion of this over-all question. I ask unanimous consent that the editorial may be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LISTEN, MR. MENZIES! OLD FRIENDS ARE CALLING FOR HELP

If the gentlemen in Canberra have the vaguest idea of this nation's best interest, they will announce, without any more beating about the bush, that Australia will support the hard-pressed Americans in Korea with a division of land troops and more squadrons of fighting planes.

The reasons why we should give this aid, without hedging, should be obvious to every Australian who remembers how we felt in 1941 when this country lay wide open to invasion.

If the Americans are swept out of Korea and Formosa the Russian front will be triumphant throughout Asia.

Whatever friends we have still on the Asiatic Continent will desert us.

Then Australia will be far out on a lonely limb.

UNO and collective security—the alliance of free peoples—will die.

And the first nation to suffer from that death will be white Australia.

Of all nations, this one depends on the aid of others—and especially on American aid.

What saved us from battle on our soil and conquent in the last war except American help?

Not a thing.

Can we expect similar help again—as we will certainly need it again—if we let the Koreans murder Americans in another Dunkerque without doing everything we can to help avert so terrible a disaster?

The Americans are closely watching all the peoples who have given flowery lip-service to UNO in the last few years and have received in return generous United States aid.

If these peoples sit on the sidelines now, while Americans die in an outnumbered struggle, many American people will argue that they would be wiser to spend their money on themselves and let the rest of the world sink.

That might be a foolish, emotional reaction in the long run, but it would be understandable.

We are told that some British people enjoy the spectacle of Americans fighting while Britain for once is at peace.

That is a stupid satisfaction, which is likely to be very short-lived.

For only one thing keeps Britain or any of us at peace at this moment—Russia's fear of American industrial strength backing up a solid British-American front.

Those who crow over the United States' embarrassment in Korea are helping to smash that front—a job on which Moscow has spent millions of her propaganda funds.

They would have their happiest day of all time at the Kremlin if the Korean struggle ended with Americans feeling that Britain and her Dominions had let Americans down.

For that would damage the only military and political combination which may draw a line to Russian ambitions.

To forestall this blow to our friendship with the United States we and the rest of the British Commonwealth must show that we are prepared to give as freely and as generously as we expect Americans to give when we are in difficulties.

This is a moment for action which counts only the needs of our friend.

If we let that friend call to us in vain now we can expect no answer to our own appeals when our time comes to face the yellow flood.

PRIME MINISTER OF AUSTRALIA TO VISIT THE SENATE

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact, since Australia has been mentioned, that tomorrow, at 2 or 2:15, the Prime Minister of Australia is to be the guest of the Senate, and is to deliver a brief address. The Chair hopes all Senators will be present to greet the Prime Minister, who is in this country to confer with our Government regarding the nature and extent of the assistance Australia may give in the Korean situation.

GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1951

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LUCAS. I ask unanimous consent that I may have one additional minute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, this same question was raised in the committee, and we were told by those from the Department of Defense that there was a parallel situation in a number of countries, that is to say, that the President or the Premier could not commit his country without referring the matter to the legislature, and that that was going on all the time. Reports have been made that help will come, but the announcement could not be made at this time, because the legislatures of the countries had not approved it.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator, I think, is correct about that. It will require some time. In other words, we happened to have our troops in Japan, nearby. We are sending them, and also, of course, some from this country. But other countries are sending troops, and they are on the way, as I understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has again expired. All time has expired on this amendment.

The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN] to the committee amendment.

Mr. LANGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment has been accepted by the committee. [Putting the question.] The amendment is agreed to. The committee amendment is still open to amendment.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment offered by me may be read at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In chapter X–B, it is proposed to strike out all after line 3, on page 447, down to and including line 17; and, at the proper place in chapter XI, insert an amount equal to the sum stricken from the chapter X–B, to be used for defense purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada is recognized for 5 minutes.

SUGGESTED 10-POINT PROGRAM FOR WINNING THE WAR

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, no one believes that the $10,400,000,000 currently requested by the President is anything but a start. However, the President has not yet outlined what is involved in the police action which he inaugurated without requesting the approval of Congress, except through additional appropriations.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Nevada is suggesting a 10-point program and an outline for emergency procedure. Only one amendment is needed. The remaining nine can be brought about through Executive order.

First, transfer ECA funds to the war chest.

Second, stop the pressure from our State Department to recognize Communist China.

Third, stop Marshall-plan countries from arming Russia and her satellites.

Fourth, call on England and France to cancel their separate nonaggression pacts with Russia.

Fifth, reduce our domestic Government budget by 20 percent and add three and one-half billion dollars to the war chest.

Sixth, transfer to the war chest the $500,000,000 available for domestic peacetime public works.

Seventh, transfer to the war chest the one and one-fourth billion dollars available for military assistance to foreign countries and unify our military efforts.

Eighth, remove from the State Department Dean Acheson and his satellites.

Ninth, establish a definite foreign policy, describe the areas, and name the nations whose integrity we must currently protect for our own ultimate safety, and notify the world and our own people what we mean to protect.

Tenth, appropriate the necessary funds to build a national-defense organization, spearheaded by an Air Corps and a submarine fleet that will be notice to the world and to our own people that we can enforce our commitments.

Mr. President, supporting the 10-point program, I submit the following:

First. Transfer ECA funds to the war chest. ECA assistance for building up European peacetime industry was to be a peacetime endeavor. While we must pay for a new war, our people cannot be expected to carry the burden of 16 foreign countries on their backs.

Second. Stop pressure from our State Department to recognize Communist China. My fellow Senators will recall that Mr. Acheson told us that the United States would not use its veto power to block United Nations' recognition of the Communist regime in China. Apparently, this was the last official act on the part of our State Department before the Soviets started their attack on South Korea. We cannot, with any degree of consistency, fight communism on the one hand and recognize it on the other.

Third. Stop the 16 Marshall plan countries from arming Russia and her satellites through the 96 trade treaties which have been made between those countries. We should take every reasonable means to see to it that the 96 trade treaties are canceled immediately.

NINETY-SIX TRADE TREATIES WITH RUSSIA AND IRON-CURTAIN COUNTRIES

The 16 Marshall plan, ECA nations, have 96 important trade treaties with Soviet Russia and such iron curtain countries shipping them everything they need to consolidate their gains and to make war.

Both England and India, through their spokesmen, Bevin and Nehru, have said that they intended to remain neutral, they wanted to trade with Russia and the Communist countries.

Now, these same nations, erstwhile allies, and other nations, have recognized Communist China without consulting this Nation, at least without the American people being informed, thus leading us into a foreign policy not only distasteful but which may be definitely dangerous.

Therefore, it is high time that the State Department discharge their constitutional responsibility and make up their mind and inform the American people and the Congress of the United States just what our foreign policy should be before it is too late. It is later than we think.

A list of the 96 trade treaties which the 16 Marshall plan countries has made and which are in good standing at this time will be found on pages 818 and 819, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 24, 1950.

Fourth. Call on England and France to cancel forthwith their nonaggression pacts with Soviet Russia. It is time for the countries which we have befriended to choose sides.

NONAGGRESSION PACTS

I shall quote briefly from a nonaggression pact signed by Anthony Eden, representing Britain, and V. Molotov, representing Communist Russia. This treaty, signed by these two men representing their respective countries of Britain and Russia, which is still in full force and effect, contained two significant articles. Article 6 in the Soviet-Britain Pact provides:

> The high contracting parties agree to render one another all possible economic assistance after the war.

Article 7 reads:

> Each high contracting party undertakes not to conclude any alliance and not to take part in any coalition directed against the other high contracting party.

Mr. President, those provisions read startlingly like the North Atlantic Pact. Since they have pacts now with both the Soviet Empire and the United States of America, it is difficult to see how they could lose in any emergency which might occur later. They have signed up with both Russia and the United States.

In the treaty signed by Mr. Molotov, again, and Mr. Bidault, representing France, which was signed in Moscow, the two articles corresponding with the two just read taken from the British Empire and the Russian Empire treaty, are article 5 and article 6. Article 5 of the French-Russian nonaggression pact reads:

> The high contracting parties undertake not to conclude any alliance and not to take part in any coalition directed against either of the high contracting parties.

Article 6 reads:

> The high contracting parties agree to render each other every possible economic assistance after the war.

Mr. President, both these nonaggression pacts are in full force and effect. All the 95 trade treaties mentioned in the debate today are in full force and effect, meaning that the parties are continuing at all times to send all the material necessary not only to Russia to consolidate her gains in eastern Europe and in Communist China, and to make war quietly and secretly, as they have in the past in China and Indochina and the Malayan States and the rest of the Far East, but they are sending them material to make war on the United States of America, if they have that idea in their minds. The State Department and the bipartisan group in this body sold that idea, that Russia was and is our potential enemy, thoroughly to the United States Senate during the first session of the Eighty-first Congress, and all through the second session of the Eighty-eighth Congress.

Fifth. Reduce our strictly domestic Government budget by 20 percent and transfer the amount saved to the war chest. This would not take one penny from national defense, the stockpiling of atomic energy, veterans' aid, or interest on the public debt. It would simply reduce by 20 percent the domestic spending which is in no way connected with those items. Let us look at our budget for the current fiscal year:

National defense	$13,545,000,000
Veterans' services and benefits	6,080,000,000
Interest on public debt	5,625,000,000
Remaining	17,189,000,000
Total	42,439,000,000

We would save $3,500,000,000 by reducing the seventeen-billion item by 20 percent. It has been pointed out by the committee headed by the distinguished Senator from Virginia how a saving of more than this could easily be made on our domestic spending.

The administration says the people must tighten their belts. Speaking of curbs for civilians, how about some curbs for the Government as well? If ordinary citizens must cut down on butter in favor of guns, why not render some lard out of the bureaucratic jobs also?

Another Member of this body from across the aisle, the distinguished senior Senator from Arkansas, able chairman of the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, called attention to the fact that the administration could easily tighten its belt. In his report, the senior Senator from Arkansas warned that "this tremendous rising cost—of government—is indicative of a fixed permanent trend that cannot be ignored or remain unchallenged." And he added that this provides a "warning of compelling force against our proceeding with reckless indifference to enact more and more laws expanding present governmental services and instigating new programs creating additional governmental obligations that will add billions annually to the already swollen costs of government."

The necessity of more economy in government is greater now than it was then.

The 1951 budget still covers up much of the waste, duplication, payroll padding, and inefficiencies exposed by the Hoover Commission, Byrd committee and other survey agencies in their numerous reports. These add up to billions of dollars of possible savings. All in all there is room for economizing if the Congress has the guts to do it.

Sixth. Transfer to the war chest the one-half billion dollars available for domestic peacetime public works. Worthy as are our peacetime public works, our taxpayers cannot be expected to pay the cost or furnish the necessary manpower during the war emergency. In wartime such works are unnecessary, and in fact, undesirable. Our money and our manhours should be devoted to the war effort. This five hundred million should be transferred to the military program.

Seventh. Transfer to the war chest the one and one-fourth billion dollars available for military assistance to foreign countries. Our own expanded military program must be upon a basis of defending the nations whose integrity is important to our ultimate safety. Our military efforts, however, should be unified. Otherwise we might very well be delivering arms to areas which will fall into the hands of our enemies. Countries which we have been arming have shown little concern for our present predicament and are still sending potential war materials to Russia and her satellites.

Eighth. Remove from the State Department Dean Acheson and his satellites who were responsible for the bungling in foreign policy which brought this country to its present plight. It is imperative that we remove these men before other serious mistakes are made.

There are many well-informed people who believe that the primary aim of Stalin and his Politburo in the Kremlin is the economic destruction of the United States, that war with America is secondary and an alternative that will be avoided, if possible, and postponed as long as possible if it is unavoidable. The view in the Kremlin is that the capitalistic United States is the keystone to the entire capitalistic system, and that if that keystone can be brought down, the whole western economic system in Europe, in North and South America, and what is left of it in Asia and Africa will crash.

The spearpoint of Soviet Russian political, ideological, economic, and military strategy to attain this objective, according to well-informed people who hold this belief, is continual war alarms on the world-encircling front of American commitments, calling for ever-increasing appropriations of vast sums of money in the United States for armaments and war preparations, and in Britain, France, Greece, Turkey, Persia, and other countries dependent upon America for economic and financial aid and military support.

Stalin's orders are reported to be to bring about the collapse of America's capitalistic economy through war alarms, enormous appropriations calling for ever higher taxes, dislocation and disruption of normal business, and ever-increasing demands by other countries dependent on American financing for aid and armaments, thus building up gigantic national debts.

In Washington the administration is unwittingly playing Stalin's game today, just as it has done since the day of unconditional surrender.

In war, the side which holds the initiative to determine the time and place of action has a tremendous advantage over the foe. In the present war in Korea, the initiative is held by Soviet Russia, which can determine the time and place of action. Korea, Formosa, French Indochina, Hongkong, Pakistan, Iran, Turkey, Greece, Yugoslavia, Germany—any of these might have been selected as the arena of battle. Any of these places might be chosen for the next battle in a prolonged, costly and irritating war.

The Russian holds the initiative because, in a word, at Yalta and Potsdam, Russia's initiative was confirmed, and more recently it has been strengthened in the persistent effort of Great Britain, India, and the State Department to have Soviet China recognized by the UN.

Now, another point in regard to the blunders of Acheson and his satellites:

It is announced now that President Truman is seeking a big war stockpile of strategic war materials. Had the State Department had a little foresight, this pushing of stock piling would not have waited until now. As a matter of fact, the State Department's foreign-trade policy has shut down approximately 70 percent of the American mines which were producing strategic war minerals.

On the Senate floor, on March 7 of this year, the junior Senator from Nevada read an obituary notice on five strategic metals—mercury, antimony, tungsten, manganese and chromite—essential in peacetime and doubly essential in wartime—the production of which ceased as a direct result of State Department foreign-trade policy.

The administration would like for everyone to overlook the civilian blunders by Truman's Secretary of State Dean Acheson which left the professional fighting leaders hamstrung and drained of resources when the administration reversed itself suddenly and told the military to defend an area which the White House and the State Department had formally declared would not be defended.

In the American intervention in Korea, under the circumstances it occurred, it seems to me that administration policy overrode the sound judgment of the American Chiefs of Staff. Generals, admirals, soldiers, airmen and seamen are expected to make good the blunders of statesmen.

American boys are paying the penalty in bloodshed in Korea today because of incompetence and lack of foresight on the part of our State Department. We can charge to the State Department the agreement concerning Berlin which did not provide for egress or ingress by western power personnel. We can also charge the State Department with the handing over of Manchuria to Soviet Russia. We can charge to the State Department the steps leading to the Korean situation. The people responsible for the foreign policy have been weak or worse. If we are to win this war and regain our prestige in the world, these persons must be removed.

Ninth. Establish a definite foreign policy.

(a) We should determine the areas in the world—in Europe, Africa, Asia, the South Seas, and the Western Hemisphere—which are important to our ultimate safety. We should determine the countries whose integrity is important to us. For 127 years the Monroe Doctrine has worked. This Nation decided 127 years ago that the integrity of the Western Hemisphere was important to us. Now, apparently, the integrity of other areas is important to us. Let Government officials in whom the people have confidence decide what those areas are.

(b) We should name all such areas and all countries so that everyone will know exactly what we will fight to protect. This will give us a good chance to stay out of trouble. Our own people are entitled to know what we are fighting for. The general opinion today is that Russia would not have started the Korean push if the Kremlin had known we would fight to protect the Republic of Korea.

(c) We should build a defense organization, spearheaded by an air corps and submarine fleet of such strength that the world will realize we can enforce our pronouncements.

Now, a little late, the administration approved universal military training. The junior Senator from Nevada introduced a bill calling for universal military training 2 years ago, and the bill was buried in an administration-controlled committee. Now, after a little fifth-rate country gives the United States one defeat after another, the administration wakes up to the need of the very thing they chose previously to ignore.

There has been stupidity all along.

Out in Korea young Americans, lacking adequate arms, training, and reinforcements, are being killed. And they are not being helped a bit by those who chose to ignore the bill for universal military training.

As the junior Senator from Nevada stated when introducing the bill:

> Universal training offers the only method through which we could insure a sufficient number and dispersal of trained military manpower without overburdening the country's economy through the maintenance of a huge standing Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps.

He also suggested that our young men should be trained for their own survival when the emergency arrives.

Tenth. Mr. President, I will close with a brief reference to the enormous amount of money we have appropriated for national defense. Where did the forty-eight and one-half billion dollars go? Since the close of World War II Congress has appropriated forty-eight and one-half billion dollars for national defense, and yet we meet ignominious defeat at the hands of little Korea. What was the forty-eight and one-half billion supposed to provide for us? Surely something better than we seem to have.

Let me read to you a brief editorial which appeared in the July 27 edition of the New York Journal-American:

> THE ADMINISTRATION'S DUTY
> President Truman is asking Congress to provide $10,486,976,000 in new military funds, and to meet part of the requisition by levying $5,000,000,000 in new or increased taxes.
> The President wants the $10,000,000,000 because, as the little war in Korea suddenly demonstrated, our national defense is inadequate, although we have expended in 4 years of peace $50,000,000,000 for military purposes.
> Our unreadiness to meet promptly a so-called police action in an area as limited as South Korea indicates that the administration has made no wise use of the immense funds it has already had.
> So the administration wants more money to do what it should have done before.

And, of course, Congress will assign the funds, if no better way can be found.

But there is a better way—or at least one that should have priority.

For how has it happened that the administration now calls for war taxes to meet its military needs?

Actually, we have continued on a war-tax basis all during the peace—or cold-war—period.

The excise war taxes have never been repealed or reduced.

The personal income and corporation taxes have remained at high levels.

Payroll taxes still flow into the Treasury.

Consequently, new war taxes must be added to the war taxes already in effect, which have been retained ever since the last war ceased.

This happens partly because of the New Deal's gross mismanagement of defense expenditures.

It happens more largely because of the New Deal's extravagant expenditures for nonmilitary purposes.

Obviously—and in view of the administration's current deficit—the primary defense need is to eliminate all unnecessary expenditures and put to defense uses the sums retrieved.

If this be done, no tax increase would be justifiable at this time, since the administration would have in hand the $5,000,000,000 which it seeks in new taxes.

If the job were well done, the administration might have even the whole $10,000,000,000 desired for military requirements—and perhaps enough besides to balance the budget.

Until the administration is willing to make some political sacrifices for the national security, its demands for sacrifices by the public are made with very ill grace.

HOW TO SAVE $8,250,000,000 FOR THE WAR CHEST

(a) Suspend ECA, a peacetime endeavor, save $3,000,000,000.

(b) Suspend domestic peacetime public works, save $500,000,000.

(c) Suspend 20 percent of civil Government spending, save $3,500,000,000.

(d) Suspend extra foreign military assistance, save $1,250,000,000.

Total savings, $8,250,000,000.

There is no valid reason for gouging the people to build up peacetime economy in Europe and finance domestic peacetime projects here while we are on a wartime basis. Economy is a much sounder method of meeting the increased military costs than burdening the American people with more taxes.

Let us put our own house in order, and properly prepare to win this and any other war forced upon us. The nine points which I have listed and discussed gives us a winning program.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask for the approval of the entire committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That entire matter is to be voted on as a whole——

Mr. HAYDEN. If the Chair will pardon me, ordinarily with an appropriation bill we vote paragraph by paragraph. We have now considered the first paragraph which relates to economic cooperation. The next paragraph relates to assistance to Korea.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the whole chapter is considered as one amendment, to be voted on as a single amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. That was not my understanding. I ask unanimous consent that for the purposes of amendment the entire chapter be considered as original text. If it were original text in the bill we would adopt it paragraph by paragraph. I think that is the orderly way in which to dispose of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent that the entire committee amendment be considered as the text of the bill for purposes of amendment, which means there would be a difference in degree of amendments which would be offered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Reserving the right to object, what effect would that have on the amendment which I desire to offer at this time? I should like to have permission to have it passed upon first.

Mr. HAYDEN. When that page of the bill is reached, which is page 451, the Senator can offer his amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would it be in order after the request of the Senator is agreed to?

Mr. HAYDEN. I am not making such a request now. I thought it would be more orderly to proceed paragraph by paragraph.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the agreement heretofore made, the whole chapter is open for amendment as a single paragraph.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I be recognized for 1 minute, under the unanimous-consent agreement?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an amendment pending. Under the agreement, there is no provision for general remarks. The Senator will be recognized on the committee amendment itself.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I call up my amendment, which applies to page 451 of the bill, and ask that it be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 451, line 5, it is proposed to strike out "$10,000,000" and insert "$26,900,000"; on page 451, line 18, after "any project", insert "except for demonstration or instructional purposes"; on page 451, lines 19 and 20, strike out "(not to exceed 10 per centum)."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Was there not an amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE], and was it acted upon?

Mr. McKELLAR. It was acted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was rejected.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the danger which faces us has already forced us to take such unusual steps as to mobilize manpower and industry and to shed American blood in Korea. But there are other measures which we must take which would have seemed equally unusual a few months ago.

There is first the entrance into the Atlantic Pact of two former neutrals of World War II—Ireland and Spain, which are both Atlantic nations possessing strategic terrain and valuable manpower. The State Department should use its good offices to promote whatever adjustments are necessary between these nations and their neighbors so that they can help the rest of the non-Communist world to carry the load.

Looming even larger is the policy to be followed toward the two former enemies of World War II, Germany and Japan. It is no exaggeration to say that the fate of these nations is a life-and-death matter for the United States, for, if the Soviets captured Germany and Japan they would possess such a huge industrial potential that they might think they could destroy the United States.

We are deeply grateful to the nations which have realized that this fight is their fight and which have sent troops to Korea. We must also recognize that it is unfair to us and to these free nations to carry the whole load of combat alone. The former neutrals—and even the former enemies—of World War II must help in this struggle for survival of human freedom. It is only fair that they bear part of the burden since their own existence is also in danger.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. I shall not want more than a quarter of a minute.

Mr. President, I want to state that I believe the last amendment the Senate adopted is one of the most important amendments which has come up during the discussion of the bill. I am 100 percent for it, and I hope that in conference it will be insisted upon by the Senate conferees and will be retained in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, by direction of the Appropriations Committee, I wish to call up two more amendments dealing with page 451 of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's amendment has already been stated.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to say that the amendment increases the appropriation for point 4, and I hope it will be adopted. The Committee on Appropriations, so far as I recall, virtually unanimously instructed me to offer the amendment.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator from Tennessee has offered the amendment. I favored the amendment in the committee. I was in favor of a lower amount, but was voted down with reference to that. I am certainly glad that the committee is in favor of the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, with that statement, I leave the matter to the Senate, and ask for a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing en bloc to the amendments offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on page 461 under the heading "Aid to Palestine Refugees." The amendment proposes on page 461, line 22, to strike out "$24,705,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$27,450,000", which is the budget estimate and the amount authorized by law. In this instance the reduction took place exactly in the same manner as heretofore recited by me with respect to the reduction in the ECA appropriation. It was an arbitrary 10-percent cut in the amount of money for which the budget had asked and for which the committee had at first voted, but subsequently reduced by 10 percent. The people affected are the Arabs who were driven out of Palestine in the course of the war. It seems to me that the cut of $2,745,000 is too drastic. In view of the pitiable condition of these people I think the Senate should restore the amount which was authorized by law and provided for in the budget.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 1 minute with respect to contributions of armed aid in Korea by United Nations members.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Jersey that he be recognized for 1 minute? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from New Jersey is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, under date of July 27, 1950, I had a compilation prepared showing the armed aid in Korea by United Nations members. The question was discussed this afternoon in connection with an amendment which had been offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN]. I ask that the memorandum be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Armed aid in Korea by United Nations members

	Ground forces	Air forces	Naval forces
Australia	"Ground troops"—particulars undecided	1 fighter squadron, in Japan when war began; now in action.	1 destroyer, 1 frigate—both in action.
Belgium		Air transport, quantity unknown; should be active soon.
Bolivia	"30 officers"
Canada		1 long-range air transport squadron and ground crews—soon.	3 destroyers, in action.
China	33,000 combat troops (not accepted)	20 C–47 transports (not accepted)
Denmark			Perhaps 1 merchant ship (under negotiation).
France			1 sloop, 1,900 tons—in action soon.
Greece		6 transport planes
Netherlands			1 destroyer, in action.
New Zealand	"Special combat unit," probably artillery—some delay expected.		2 frigates (resemble destroyers)—in action.
Norway			Merchant tonnage (amount unspecified; discussions going on).
Thailand	4,000 officers and men: organized unit, said to be high quality.
Turkey	4,500 troops
United Kingdom	A "self-contained force," said to be of brigade size (5,000 to 6,000 troops).		3 cruisers, 2 carriers, 6 destroyers and DE's—in action from the start.

RECAPITULATION: FORCES IN ACTION AND FORCES EXPECTED

Now in action	None as yet	1 fighter squadron (Australian)	3 cruisers, 2 carriers, 15 smaller combat ships.
Offered and expected soon	Perhaps 4,000 Thai troops	Air transport: 1 Canadian squadron, Belgian (amount unknown).	1 sloop (French).
Offered but not expected soon	Australian (number unknown); New Zealand special unit; 4,500 from Turkey; 5,000 to 6,000 from United Kingdom.	6 Greek transports	Norwegian merchant tonnage; amount unknown; perhaps 1 Danish merchant ship.
Offered but not accepted	33,000 Chinese Nationalist troops	20 Chinese C–47 transports
Total in action or definitely offered and expected to serve	About 15,000 troops	1 fighter squadron. More than a squadron of air transports.	3 cruisers, 2 carriers, 15 smaller combat ships, several merchant ships.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment to section XB, as amended.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in the past 20 minutes discussion has developed between the respective leaders looking toward postponing consideration of my amendment until tomorrow. If it is to go over until tomorrow, the decision to have it go over should be made now. Otherwise we shall go on for 3 hours this afternoon. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to yield the floor for that purpose. Otherwise I should like to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Speaking in the position of the acting minority leader I should like to ask the majority leader what he proposes the Senate take up during the remainder of the afternoon if the suggestion of the Senator from Nevada with respect to postponing consideration of the amendment providing aid for Spain until tomorrow is adopted?

Mr. LUCAS. If the suggestion of the able Senator from Nevada is adopted by the Senate, I presume that other amendments could be considered.

Mr. HAYDEN. Section XB is ready for approval except for this amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. Perhaps nothing would be left to do this afternoon so far as the appropriation bill is concerned. I understand only one more important amendment is to be voted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would call to the attention of the majority leader and the minority leader that chapter XI of the bill has not been acted upon.

Mr. LUCAS. Is that the chapter in which the Senator from California is interested?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is chapter XI, General Provisions—Departments and Agencies.

Mr. LUCAS. Under the unanimous-consent agreement we would be here at least until 7 o'clock if we consumed 3 hours before we would be able to vote on the amendment of the Senator from Nevada. Perhaps it would take until 7:30 or later. The Senator from Nevada is eager to have debate on the amendment go over until tomorrow. It is satisfactory to me if that is the will of the Senate. In the meantime we could take up the one remaining chapter in the appropriation bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Chapter XI, on page 462, is the remaining chapter.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I have talked with Senators on this side of the aisle who I know are interested in the amendment with respect to aid to Spain. So far as I can determine, the suggestion of postponing the amendment until tomorrow is agreeable to them. I should like to have the majority leader indicate how we would proceed tomorrow if that were done.

Mr. McCARRAN. I should like to make the suggestion, if I may. It has been announced by the Chair that the Prime Minister of Australia would appear before the Senate tomorrow at a certain hour. As I recall, it will be at 2:15 or 2:30 o'clock. Perhaps it could be arranged that the amendment I propose could come up following the appearance of the Prime Minister of Australia. Such an arrangement would be very satisfactory to me.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator mean to have the amendment taken up immediately after the Senate convenes?

Mr. McCARRAN. No.

Mr. LUCAS. That would leave 2 free hours before the Prime Minister's visit. I do not know whether it would require 2 hours to finish the remainder of the appropriation bill before reaching any controversial amendments. I should not like to waste 2 hours. I wonder whether we could not use 2 hours, from 12 to 2, for debate, take time out for the reception to the Prime Minister of Australia, and finish with the amendment of the Senator from Nevada immediately following the Prime Minister's visit.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope very much we can finish consideration of the bill tomorrow. It has been before the Senate for a long time, and we have nearly finished with it. I think we ought to make some arrangement for final action upon it. I want to help the Senator from Nevada in any way I can so that we may consider his amendment. At the same time, it is very important that this bill be sent to conference.

Mr. LUCAS. I agree with the Senator from Tennessee. We have been on the bill for a long time. The sooner we finish its consideration, the better I shall like it.

Mr. McCARRAN. It is the desire of the Senator from Nevada to have the very best attendance possible in the Senate when the matter covered by his amendment is presented. It is with that thought in mind that I believe it would be well to have it taken up after the appearance of the Prime Minister of Australia. I thought that with the Prime Minister's appearance before the Senate a good attendance would be assured, and therefore we could go ahead with the presentation of our facts on the amendment. That is the reason for my suggestion.

Mr. LUCAS. It seems to me—and I am only thinking out loud now—if we had 2 hours of debate, from 12 to 2 tomorrow, and immediately after the Prime Minister's visit we had another short debate, that we would have more Senators in attendance than if we followed the suggestion of the Senator from Nevada to begin the consideration of his amendment after the Prime Minister's visit. Senators must go to committee meetings, and probably would leave the floor. However, I am satisfied that they would remain for an hour and a half if they knew the Senator's amendment was to be voted on.

Mr. McCARRAN. The amendment must be voted on. The agreement is for its consideration for 3 hours today, the time to be divided between the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Nevada. We want to bring the matter up as expeditiously as possible and dispose of it as promptly as possible.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. In the interest of accomplishing the expedition which the majority leader suggests I should like to suggest that we consider the amendment for an hour and a half preceding the Prime Minister's visit and for an hour and a half following the Prime Minister's visit. Perhaps some other matters could be taken up immediately after the Senate convenes.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the suggestion that an hour and a half before 2 o'clock, and an hour and a half after the Prime Minister finishes his address before the Senate be given to the amendment would be perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, would it be possible to agree on an hour when we could vote? Could we vote at 4 o'clock?

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not believe it is going to be necessary to make an agreement such as that. I think that by not agreeing on an hour for a vote, we can save time. I do not think the debate will take 3 hours, when we get to the subject.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not think it will.

Mr. McKELLAR. I entertain great hopes that we can dispose of the bill tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Nevada to the fact that his suggestion would require a modification of the present unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I desire to know whether it is contemplated that the Senate will proceed with chapter XI, the general provisions of the bill, in the event we should reach that point in the bill before the distinguished majority leader desired to move a recess this evening.

Mr. LUCAS. That is what we were discussing when the Senator from Nebraska entered the Chamber. If we postpone consideration of the amendment relating to Spain, and agree to consider it tomorrow, we will proceed with the appropriation bill.

Mr. WHERRY. I am reluctant to go into chapter XI until there is a quroum call, at least. I am sure Senators desire to be present when chapter XI is considered.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will have a quorum called.

Mr. WHERRY. Before the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into, I should like to have a quorum called.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me see if we have a meeting of the minds on this matter. When a recess or an adjournment is taken tonight it will be taken until 12 o'clock tomorrow, and we will then proceed, after the preliminary matters which usually are taken up, to debate the amendment relating to Spain for an hour and a half. Then the Prime Minister from Australia is to be entertained before this body, and there will be an hour and a half of debate thereafter. Is that the general understanding?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. I am not at all objecting to the provisions of the unanimous-consent request, except that I was desirous of knowing how far in the bill the distinguished majority leader expected to go before he moved a recess tonight. If it is contemplated that we are to take up the general provisions, chapter XI, I should like to have a quorum called before we enter into the agreement.

Mr. McCARRAN. Before we do that, may I have unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the third chapter of the bill, which is the chapter covering the judicary appropriation?

I hold in my hand a letter from the Chief Justice of the United States, and also a letter from Mr. Chandler, the Administrator of the courts, asking for an amendment to the bill regarding the appropriation for the Judiciary.

Some years ago by law we placed referees in bankruptcy on a salary basis. Theretofore they had been on a fee basis. For about 3 years now they have been on a salary basis. In order to furnish clerks for the referees in bankruptcy, the Chief Justice, as chairman of the Judical Conference, and the Adminstrator, urge that we go back to the figure which the Budget sent to the Congress, but which was eliminated in the House, and the Senate went along with the House action. If I may have unanimous consent to go into that, I will present it. It will take only a minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised by the parliamentarian that it will be necesary first to modify the standing unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. McCARRAN. I believe that to be true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. After it is modified, it would be in order for the Senator from Nevada to make request for another unanimous-consent agreement respecting the item to which he has referred.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, if I may address an observation to the Senator from Nebraska, I think it would expedite what he wants to have done now if he would agree to the unanimous-consent agreement that we postpone consideration of the amendment of the Senator from Nevada until tomorrow, and then proceed with a quorum call, and work for a while longer today. I think we could do that, if he would agree to the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection to the unanimous-consent agreement at all, but I should prefer to have a quorum called just before we enter into it. I do not think it will make any difference one way or the other, I am sure it will be agreed to, but I should like to have a quorum called.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Anderson	Gurney	Malone
Benton	Hayden	Martin
Brewster	Hendrickson	Maybank
Bricker	Hickenlooper	Morse
Bridges	Hill	Mundt
Butler	Holland	Murray
Byrd	Humphrey	Myers
Capehart	Ives	O'Conor
Chapman	Johnson, Colo.	O'Mahoney
Chavez	Johnson, Tex.	Pepper
Connally	Johnston, S. C.	Robertson
Cordon	Kefauver	Russell
Douglas	Kem	Saltonstall
Dworshak	Kerr	Smith, Maine
Eastland	Knowland	Smith, N. J.
Ecton	Langer	Sparkman
Ellender	Leahy	Stennis
Ferguson	Lehman	Taft
Flanders	Lodge	Thomas, Okla.
Frear	Lucas	Thye
Fulbright	McCarran	Tydings
George	McClellan	Watkins
Gillette	McFarland	Wherry
Graham	McKellar	Williams
Green	Magnuson	Young

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] is recognized.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I suggest that the majority leader present the request for modification of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, in view of the fact that it is now 4:30 o'clock, and that under the previous unanimous-consent agreement the debate was to continue for not longer than 3 hours on the amendment dealing with Spain, after we have disposed of all the amendments on the chapter we have been considering, I now modify the unanimous-consent request by making the following request:

I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that on tomorrow, following the convening of the Senate at 12 o'clock, we proceed to debate the amendment involving aid to Spain for 1½ hours previous to 2 o'clock; that following the address by Prime Minister Menzies of Australia we then further debate the aid-to-Spain amendment for not longer than 1½ hours, at the conclusion of which a vote be taken on the amendment; the time to be equally divided between the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to ask the question: Is it the understanding of the Senator from Illinois that under his proposed modification the debate would begin at 12:30 tomorrow and extend from 12:30 to 2 o'clock?

Mr. LUCAS. Not necessarily. Any time between 12 and 2 the hour and one-half debate could take place. We will first transact morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At what time would the debate begin?

Mr. LUCAS. Following disposition of business during what we call the morning hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At not later than 12:30.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct; not later than 12:30. I should like to include also in the unanimous-consent request the same provision that was included in the agreement previously entered into, that no amendment to the aid-to-Spain amendment shall be offered which is not germane; also that I am not waiving any points of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator would continue the same conditions that were stated in the current unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the distinguished majority leader. Perhaps the Senate, if it continues consideration of the bill tonight may take up chapter XI, and proceed as far as it can with the remainder of the bill. It is the purpose of the majority leader to take a recess at 6 o'clock. Assume we had gotten into chapter XII, and had not completed action on that chapter tonight. I understand it is proposed, in such event, temporarily to lay consideration of that chapter aside, and the unanimous-consent agreement would apply then to the so-called aid-to-Spain amendment, in the foreign aid portion of the bill. I ask the majority leader if it is his intention not only to vote on the aid-to-Spain amendment, but to complete the foreign aid chapter before the Senate returns to consideration of what would be the pending business, which would be amendments in chapter XI. Is that correct?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Nebraska is correct in his understanding of the situation.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, there are two amendments to the bill which are of great importance to many Members of the Senate. I wanted the understanding that should we finish action on chapter XI tonight, and the bill were to be finished, insofar as committee amendments are concerned, we could then bring up the two amendments tomorrow, after disposition of the Spanish aid amendment?

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand, the amendments to be offered by the Senator from Washington are amendments which are to be offered to the bill after we have completed the committee amendments to the bill.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. After we have completed the committee amendments to the bill the amendments referred to by the Senator from Washington are in the same category as any other amendments, and certainly the Senator from Washington would not be foreclosed from offering his amendments.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have no objection to the unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupant of the chair will state that he is advised that chapter XI of the bill has not yet been taken up. The Senator from Illinois has requested unanimous consent to modify the current unanimous-consent agreement upon which the Senate is operating, in the manner stated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, the chairman of the subcommittee handling chapter XI is the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. In that chapter appears section 1111, better known as the antideficiency provision. With reference to that provision, there are some Senators who purport to propose an amendment which deals with grants to the States for old-age pensions. We would not like to have the antideficiency provision apply to such grants, because after all it is the States who contribute, who are the determining factor in saying what shall be done. I wonder whether we will have sufficient time this evening, in considering chapter XI, even to discuss that particular provision.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, as I understand, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee desires to proceed with chapter XI. We will probably continue until 6 o'clock, and then take a recess until tomorrow.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Chapter XI contains section 1111, dealing with the working funds. Section 1111 is the antideficiency provision, which is the controversial matter of the chapter. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], and I wish to offer an amendment to the antideficiency provision which would take care of the old-age pensioners within the individual States, and would make the antideficiency provision inapplicable to them.

Mr. LUCAS. There is nothing to prevent the Senator from doing that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the modification proposed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, before we begin on chapter XI, I should like to state that the Senate has been on this appropriation bill for weeks, and it seems to me we should be able to finish it not later than Wednesday. Tomorrow we shall dispose of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada, and perhaps we can get through these two chapters. Certainly not later than Wednesday we should be able to finish this bill. I am going to try to do so and, if necessary, we shall hold a night session on Wednesday in order to complete action on the bill.

It is my understanding that by that time, the bill now being considered by the Banking and Currency Committee, the measure involving the war effort, probably will be ready to be placed before the Senate. Certainly we wish to handle that measure as quickly as possible.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I agree with the Senator that there is such an urgency, but I wonder why the Senator is planning to have the Senate take a recess so early this afternoon.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware is trying to embarrass me, as usual, when he rises to ask a question.

I would just as soon stay here, and we are going to stay here this afternoon and proceed with chapter XI; we shall remain here until 6 o'clock or a little later, which is about the time we have been staying in session right along.

Of course, if I were to ask the Senate to remain in session until 9 o'clock in the evening, the Senator from Delaware or some other Senator would say, "Why do you keep us here so late? I had a dinner engagement, and I should be home with my family, instead of being here." On the other hand, when I am willing to have the Senate end its session for the day at approximately 6 o'clock in the evening, I am pilloried for that.

Of course, Mr. President, that is what one gets for being majority leader. However, I can take it. I think I understand my friend the Senator from Delaware fairly well.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I should like to discuss an amendment which I have, if I may have the floor in my own right.

Mr. LUCAS. I yield the floor.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, for expenses of referees, the budget estimate was in the amount of $1,035,400, and the House allowed $960,000. The amount authorized for this purpose last year was in the amount of $886,000, and the amount of increase granted by the House was for within-grade salary advancements and part-time personnel. No additional funds were allowed for additional full-time positions. The Senate committee concurred in the recommendations of the House.

I have now received evidence of the increase in bankruptcy cases. Chief Justice Vinson has written to me, requesting that the bill be amended to include the full amount of the budget estimate of $1,035,400. This would be an increase of $75,400.

Mr. President, in view of this additional evidence presented, I move that on page 103, line 11, the figure "$960,000" be stricken and the figure "$1,035,400" be inserted in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls attention to the fact that unanimous consent must be given in order to take up the amendment at this time. Does the Senator request such unanimous consent?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I think it would be clearer to ask such unanimous consent after I have made the motion.

I now ask unanimous consent that the letter from Mr. Chief Justice Vinson be read by the clerk. The reading of the letter will make this matter clearer.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me ask the Senator just what he desires me to note.

Mr. McCARRAN. In view of the additional evidence presented and in view of the request made by the Chief Justice, I have moved that on page 103, in line 11, the figure "$960,000" be stricken out, and the figure "$1,035,400" be inserted in lieu thereof.

If the Senator from Tennessee will permit the letter from the Chief Justice to be read, it will give enlightenment to the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very happy to have that done.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the clerk may read the letter from the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., July 20, 1950.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Appropriations Committee, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: As chairman of the Judicial Conference of the United States, I feel impelled to call your attention to an item in the general appropriation bill for 1951 (H. R. 7786) as reported to the Senate from your committee. This item affects the appropriation for the expenses of the referees in bankruptcy.

You will recall that the legislation under which our present system was established was effective July 1, 1947. Inasmuch as the new bankruptcy system was to be on a self-sustaining basis and funds for its operation until such a financial condition should exist were necessary, the Congress authorized an advancement from the general funds of the Treasury in the amount of $500,000 to the expense funds of the referees. This fund contemplates expenditures incidental to providing for necessary office space, clerical and other office assistance, supplies and equipment, travel, etc.

As of June 30, 1950, there was a cash balance on hand in the expense fund of $599,986, with a remainder unpaid of the $500,000 advanced by the Treasury of $100,000. This leaves a net balance in the expense fund on the first day of the current fiscal year of $499,986. In addition to this net balance, there was a sum of $623,376 paid into the general receipts fund of the Treasury by the clerks of the various courts resulting from the clerks' fee of $3 per filing of 77,922 cases.

In the fiscal year next preceding the effective date of the act (July 1, 1947) filings numbered 13,170; in the past fiscal year there were 33,391 filings, more than two and one-half times the filings in fiscal 1947; and for fiscal 1951 it is estimated that there will be 7,000 more cases filed than in the past fiscal year, or a total of approximately 40,000 cases. If this estimate becomes a reality, there will be filed in the present fiscal year more than three times the number of cases filed in fiscal year 1947, the year next preceding the establishment of the new system. I feel that I should add that Mr. Covey, who is the Chief of the Bankruptcy Division of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts last January, estimated the filings for the past fiscal year to be 33,400; the actual number of filings was 33,391. I mention this to demonstrate the accuracy of the estimates for fiscal 1951.

The Judicial Conference of the United States estimated that the total cost for the 34 additional full-time clerks in the referees' offices needed to handle this increase in the volume of business would be $77,656, and this figure was included in the budget estimates. The House of Representatives Appropriations Committee reduced this item $75,400, and the bill came to the Senate with this reduction. If the Senate does not restore this amount, the referees will be seriously handicapped in the handling of this new business. These additional full-time employees will have a classification rating of GS 2, with an entrance salary of $2,450 per annum under the existing salary structure.

Naturally, I am interested in seeing an efficient and expeditious administration in the bankruptcy field. Not only will there be more respect for its administration if it is efficiently and expeditiously handled, but I feel certain that we will agree that benefits will accrue to the creditors by such handling of these cases.

The Referees' Salary Act was signed by the President on June 28, 1946, and became effective July 1, 1947, so I have lived with the new system during its entire operation. The judicial conference has given particular attention to its operation, and takes some satisfaction out of the fact that it is one segment of governmental operation in which the intake is greater than the outgo and at the same time there has been an efficient and expeditious handling of an enormous case load.

The receipts in the expense fund in the three fiscal years have exceeded the disbursements by $499,986.

I certainly hope that you may feel inclined toward further consideration of this item and that the sum of $75,400 will be added to this item in the bill. I feel that without this additional money, and the additional personnel to be provided thereby, the efficiency of the system will be substantially affected. I know that neither you, your committees nor the Congress would have any desire that such would be the result.

Sincerely,

FRED M. VINSON.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I now move the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada requests unanimous consent that the amendment be now considered, being an amendment on page 103, in line 11, to strike out "$960,000" and insert "$1,035,400."

Is there objection? Without objection, the amendment is considered and agreed to.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, in connection with the amendment which has just been agreed to by the Senate, two letters from Henry P. Chandler, Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, be printed in the RECORD in furtherance of the amendment just adopted.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICE OF THE
UNITED STATES COURTS,
Washington, D. C., June 20, 1950.

Mr. THOMAS J. SCOTT,
Assistant Clerk of the Senate Appropriations Committee, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SCOTT: We have now received reports from all of the district courts regarding the number of new bankruptcy cases filed in May 1950. The total for the month is 3,256, which is a new high in the current trend of increased filings. It represents an increase of 423 cases over the preceding month, when 2,833 cases were filed, and an increase of 693 cases as compared with the month of May 1949, when 2,563 cases were filed.

On a percentage basis the increase over April 1950 was 14.2 percent and over May of 1949, 27 percent. During the first 11 months of the fiscal year 1949, there were 23,491 cases filed. In the corresponding period of the current fiscal year, 30,326 cases were filed, an increase of 29.1 percent.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY P. CHANDLER.

ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICE OF THE
UNITED STATES COURTS,
Washington, D. C., May 31, 1950.

Mr. THOMAS J. SCOTT,
Assistant Clerk of the Senate Appropriations Committee, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SCOTT: The reports received from the district courts disclose that a total of 2,833 bankruptcy cases were filed during the month of April. This is an increase of 11 percent over the filings in the month of April 1949, when 2,544 cases were filed. There were 20,928 cases filed in the first 10 months of the fiscal year 1949. During the corresponding period of the fiscal year 1950, 27,059 cases were filed, an increase of 29.3 percent.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY P. CHANDLER.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I send forward an amendment to which I invite the attention of the Senator from Tennessee. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 89, between lines 21 and 22, it is proposed to insert:

Roads through public lands: For the survey, construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of main roads through unappropriated or unreserved public lands, nontaxable Indian lands, or other Federal reservations pursuant to authority contained in section 3 of the Federal Highway Act (42 Stat. 212), as amended by the act of June 24, 1930 (46 Stat. 805), the sum of $5,000,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That such funds shall be available for expenditure on the basis of need, as determined by the Commissioner of Public Roads upon application of the highway departments of the respective States concerned and without regard to any law for the apportionment of such funds among said States.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be taken up and considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, most respectfully, I may say to the Senator from Nevada that, as I understand, this amendment came from the subcommittee of the Committee on Public Works, of which he and I were members.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. There is a public works authorization pending before the Senate.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me say to the Senator, before he goes further, that the amendment I have just sent forward and which has been read, came from the Committee on Public Works and was approved, to be offered as an amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. The chairman of the committee is now addressing the Chair, and I yield to him.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I may say to the Senator from Massachusetts and also to my good friend, the Senator from Nebraska, that the history of this amendment is this: The Committee on Public Works, under the sponsorship of the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], authorized this as an item in the regular road bill. Later on, the Senator from Utah appeared before the Committee on Appropriations in an effort to expedite the appropriation of the money authorized under the regular road bill. The only way it could be done was to have the Committee on Appropriations refer it to the Committee on Public Works, which committee in turn would refer it back to the Committee on Appropriations. Inasmuch as the Committee on Public Works had already approved the authorization, the only thing this does is that instead of waiting, as we did on the military money for the parkway road between here and Baltimore, the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] made a showing before our committee that it possibly has something to do with the war effort, if we are to have a war. It was at the instance of the Senator from Utah, who made a proper showing, and at the insistence of the Senator from Oklahoma, that the Senator from Nevada eventually proposed the amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Why does this have to come up ahead of the general road bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. There is one particular reason, which I emphasize, namely, that in the State of Utah, first of all, there is what is known as Highway 6, which is a highway extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The only gap in Highway 6 that is not completed is in the State of Utah, a stretch of about 48 miles. It is essential that this gap be closed now and the road constructed, because Highway 40, carrying the greater bulk of the traffic, is about the only military road available to the military establishments around Salt Lake City and in the Utah Valley. Moreover, if Highway 40 were put out of business, it would be a difficult matter to get through Utah and to the Pacific coast. So it is essential that the 48-mile gap be completed at once.

That is only one. There are other gaps in other roads in other States. For example, the State of Oklahoma has one highway in which the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] is interested. My interest and the interest of the Senator from Utah is in the particular gap in Highway 6 to which I have made reference. And if this is included in this bill, being a part of the highway appropriation, which is carried in the pending bill, work can be begun on that road and completed at an early date.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Is the bill containing the authorization for the fiscal years 1952–53, in the amount of $550,000,000 for each year, before the Senate?

Mr. McCARRAN. That bill is to come from the Committee on Public Works.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. That is a new authorization bill. As I understand, it is coming from the Committee on Public Works, and this additional appropriation would add about $5,000,000 to the present 1951 authorization, and the Senate would be asked then to appropriate that $5,000,000, to be expended for public roads this year, out of the 1951 appropriations.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is exactly correct. The bill for 1952–53 also contains some $13,000,000 for the parkway road. A showing was made before the committee that under the present circumstances it was essential to proceed with the parkway road between here and Baltimore. It is connected with a new area outside Fort Meade. It was done as a matter of military necessity, though that was not the only reason. For the Committee on Public Works now to report this item and have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations, would be the only possible way that it could be considered in connection with the appropriation bill in a manner parallel to that in connection with the parkway item.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Why is it not a question of including this item in an authorization bill, and allowing this amendment to come in as a supplemental appropriation this year, and then having the Appropriations Committee consider how much to appropriate for it?

Mr. McCARRAN. I may say to the Senator that, in connection with the bill on which we are now working, he and I were members of the subcommittee which dealt with the highway appropriation. That highway appropriation was for the current year, on which we are now going forward, 1950–51. If we can get provision made for this item, it will come under a specific law. Some years ago Congress passed a specific law with respect to a public highway to run exclusively through public domain, appropriations then to be made for its construction. It is under that law that this appropriation was approved by the Committee on Public Works. It is under that law that we are offering this amendment.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, what bothers me in connection with this matter is that as I remember, we cut down by some millions of dollars the appropriation for assistance to the States which was requested by the Public Roads Commissioner, and this would add $5,000,000 and would penalize other States. Would it not penalize other States?

Mr. McCARRAN. No.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. But it would take something away from other States, and then add $5,000,000, would it not?

Mr. McCARRAN. No; the Senator is in error. It does not penalize other States or take away anything from them. It comes under a special law which applies directly, specifically, and exclusively to roads running through public domain, and that only.

If the Senator will recall, Mr. MacDonald, of the Bureau of Public Roads, came before the committee and testified that this was the way to get the money for the gap in Utah and for the other gaps which exist. On his testimony, the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS], the Senator from Nevada, and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] took the matter to the Public Works Committee so that the committee might pass on the question, because that was the proper committee to deal with it. We want to go forward this year with this all-essential project so that these roads may be improved and put in condition because of the national situation.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The Senator's justification for this appropriation is that it is not a part of the Hayden-Cartright bill, so-called, but is a completely separate bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. A separate law.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. And the Senator believes the appropriation to complete the link should be made in full on this authorization, which is a separate authorization.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Nebraska for a moment, I have before me House bill 7941, a road bill which is on the calendar and which will, we hope, be considered by this body very soon. Section 10 is the section which was sponsored by the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], and which refers to this particular item. Section 10 reads as follows:

SEC. 10. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 3 of the Federal Highway Act (42 Stat. 212), as amended by the act of June 24, 1930 (46 Stat. 805), there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the survey, construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of main roads through unappropriated or unreserved public lands, nontaxable Indian lands, or other Federal reservations the sum of $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending July 30, 1951.

So, Mr. President, all we are doing by this amendment is to provide for this particular item.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand that, but the Senator is asking for $5,000,000. How many different sections of road are there which are not complete? If there is a State in the Union in which I would rather see a road built than in the State of Nebraska, it is the State of the distinguished Senator from New Mexico or the State of the distinguished Senator from Utah. I understand there are some incomplete roads in Oklahoma, and I should like to help the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma in that regard. What other units would be included in this $5,000,000?

Mr. CHAVEZ. According to the information furnished by the Bureau of Public Roads, which has charge of the construction, planning, surveying, and all that goes with the construction of roads, the $5,000,000 will take care of connecting the roads which are in this particular category.

Mr. WHERRY. Where are they located, other than in the States of Utah and Oklahoma?

Mr. CHAVEZ. There are some in Oklahoma, in public parks; there are some in national parks; there are some in Indian lands, and possibly some in forests. There are some in New Mexico. There are probably some in every public-land State in the Union.

Mr. WHERRY. Will $5,000,000 take care of the situation?

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is what we have been advised.

I wish New Mexico were as lucky as is the State of Nebraska. Sixty-three percent of the entire area of my State belongs to the Federal Government and not to the State of New Mexico. That is the reason why the law was passed.

Mr. WHERRY. I am not quarreling with the basic law; but what the distinguished Senator is doing is requesting an appropriation of $5,000,000, in addition to the one for the present fiscal year. Did the question ever go before the Appropriations Committee for a hearing?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to acquaint the Senate with the parliamentary situation.

This amendment was offered on July 19 and referred to the Committee on Public Works. It was supported by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] on July 28 and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The matter comes under the purview of subsection 3 of rule XVI, which the Chair reads as follows:

All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least 1 day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and when actually proposed to the bill no amendment proposing to increase the amount stated in such amendment shall be received; in like manner, amendments proposing new items of appropriation to river and harbor bills, establishing post roads, or proposing new post roads, shall, before being considered, be referred to the Committee on Public Works.

The Chair understands that this amendment was offered pursuant to subsection 3 of rule XVI and has strictly complied in all respects therewith.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Chair for the information, but I do not believe the Appropriations Committee ever heard testimony on the bill. It may have at a time when I was not present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair invites attention to the fact that the rule requires that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations at least 1 day before consideration.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand the authorization perfectly, but I do not recall that the amendment ever came before the Appropriations Committee for justification. What we are doing is getting unanimous consent, after the authorization has been made, to bring the matter to the Senate floor and to appropriate $5,000,000 for building roads, without consideration by the Appropriations Committee. That is the point I am raising.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Nebraska that if we were starting originally with the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Nebraska would be correct. But when the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Nevada took the matter up with the chairman of the Committee on Public Works I consulted the Parliamentarian. I said, "How can this bill be handled for an appropriation?" He informed me of the parliamentary situation by which, if the amendment were referred to a standing committee which had charge of the authorization, the committee could report it adversely or favorably. That of itself would take care of the point of order that it would be legislation on an appropriation bill. That is what the Chair has tried to explain to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. McCARRAN. In no sense of the word is it legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Not at this time.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am not going to raise the point of order. But we are bypassing the Committee on Appropriations by coming straight to the floor of the Senate. I think that is the wrong way to obtain appropriations for road programs. If there is a military need, and there is a section of road which has to be constructed in order to get traffic through, if there is no other Member of the Senate who objects, I shall not offer an objection. But I think it is being brought to the floor of the Senate without having the appropriation justified in the committee. Many roads are authorized which are not built. Even though they are authorized, they still have to be justified for appropriation.

I am not going to object, Mr. President. It seems that I do most of the objecting. The Senate knows what it is doing. It is proposing to provide on the Senate floor an appropriation to the tune of $5,000,000. We are going to vote $5,000,000 worth of road construction. I believe we would be establishing a precedent. However, I shall not object.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator is in error.

Mr. WHERRY. I think it is the wrong way to legislate.

Mr. McCARRAN. In my judgment the Senator is in error. This is not what the Senator claims it to be. This item is authorized by a statute which has been in existence for years.

Mr. WHERRY. That is the basic law.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is the basic law in accordance with which we are offering the amendment to the pending appropriation bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly.

Mr. McCARRAN. The amendment is before the Senate. Any amendment can be offered.

Mr. WHERRY. It has not been considered by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McCARRAN. It has been considered by the committee. These [indicating] are the hearings which were held on the whole chapter.

Mr. WHERRY. Was there a hearing on this $5,000,000 item for roads?

Mr. McCARRAN. It came before the Subcommittee on the Department of Commerce.

Mr. WHERRY. It did not come before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McCARRAN. It came before the subcommittee. The Senator from Massachusetts was present when we went into this whole matter.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I should like to state to the Senator from Nevada that he is correct in saying that this matter came before the subcommittee. I was not present. He is correct that it was heard by the subcommittee. However, I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that section 10 of the new Road Authorization Act, H. R. 7941, Calendar 2048, has not yet been considered. In section 10 of that bill the following provision appears:

> The sum of $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and a like sum for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1952, to remain available until expended.

Mr. McCARRAN. That $5,000,000 would not become effective until 1951–52. The bill to which the Senator refers becomes effective in 1951–52.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. There are two authorizations; one for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and a like sum of $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1952.

Mr. McCARRAN. That money cannot be used until it is available. This amendment would put the money into the pending appropriation bill. After the appropriation bill was passed the money would be available.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to correct the record. I did not know this item had gone to the Committee on Appropriations. I was speaking about the full committee. To my knowledge it never reached the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not wish to mislead the Senator. I do not know whether this particular item was dealt with by the full Committee on Appropriations. However, appropriations for roads came before the subcommittee on the Department of Commerce, and we dealt with it in that subcommittee. Then we reported it to the full committee and it was approved by the full committee.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I do not say that my memory is correct, but I respectfully suggest that it did not go quite that far. The matter was considered by the subcommittee, but was not approved by the subcommittee. Therefore, it did not come before the full committee for its consideration. In the subcommittee we decided to drop it. That is my memory of it. I do not say that I am correct about it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Again I do not wish to mislead the Senator. What I am trying to say is that the whole subject matter was dealt with under chapter III, and we dealt with the whole subject matter of road construction for the year 1950–51. The matter is before the Senate now. All we are trying to do now is to take that which has been approved by the Committee on Public Works and put it into the 1950–51 appropriation.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The authorization bill has not yet been approved by the Senate. It has been approved by the Committee on Public Works, but not by the Senate.

Mr. McCARRAN. This amendment I have offered has been approved by the Committee on Public Works.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. But not by the Senate.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is what we are trying to have done now.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is what we are trying to have done.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Then I come back to my original statement. Assume that we cut the authorization bill. The bill provides for $1,100,000,000 for 2 years. If we were to cut that amount by half or by a quarter, and appropriate this amount in full, we would be going ahead faster on this piece of road and being unfair to many States, because the contributions to those States would be reduced.

Mr. McCARRAN. It does not affect the other States at all. It is not money which is distributed among the States. It is money that goes directly under a specific law to highways which run through public domain exclusively.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Supposing Congress authorized $300,000,000—merely by way of using a figure—instead of $550,000,000. The contributions to the States would be cut by $250,000,000. At the same time we would be going ahead with the full $5,000,000 on this piece of road in the State of Utah.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. WATKINS. I am very much interested in the colloquy on this particular amendment. The situation in Utah is one of national concern. We have only one highway running out of Utah to the West, to California and Nevada. We have another one running almost due north and south to southern Utah, southern Nevada, and southern California. In and around Odgen, Utah, we have Hill Field, army stores, naval stores, and a naval depot. We have other military stores at Tooele. We have the Geneva steel plant, which is just south of Salt Lake City. Highway No. 40, which runs west into Nevada, is the only road which has been completed all the way through. That carried the big burden during the last war, as a result of which it has been ripped to pieces. We are trying to repair it and put it back into condition. Highway No. 6 runs from Provincetown, Mass., to Long Beach, Calif., and it is an improved highway all the way except for about 47 miles in western Utah near the Nevada border. Nevada has built a road to the border. It built an improved highway to the border, and this 47 miles of road is unimproved. That road runs entirely through public domain, and it comes up under a hardship situation. In a time such as we are now facing, the road is an absolute necessity from the national point of view, not from the standpoint of Utah or for the sake of Utah. Utah can get along for a while longer, if it must, without it.

Mr. WHERRY. What is the objection to bringing it up in the regular road bill? The Senate will be here next week.

Mr. WATKINS. We have had some experience during a war with getting roads built and getting other public improvement taken care of. The contractors are ready to do this piece of work, and they can undertake its construction. If it can be done now it can be done cheaper than it could be done during an emergency. Now is the time to do it, if we can get the appropriation.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Personally, I have no objection to this appropriation going through at this time, providing the Senator from Nevada will accept an amendment to the effect that if the authorization is reduced this amount, even though it would not come within the authorization bill, being an exception to it, would likewise be reduced in the same proportionate amount.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is agreeable to me. I am willing to accept such an amendment.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Would the Senator object to including such proper language within his amendment?

Mr. McCARRAN. In other words, if there is to be a cut made all the way through the bill, this item shall be subjected to the same cut.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I refer to the authorization in the road bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. I agree to that.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The bill contains specific language by which the President is directed in time of emergency, notwithstanding that he already has such authority, to cut it as much as he wants to cut it in order to meet the national emergency.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am entirely content with the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a while ago I asked the distinguished Senator from Nevada to yield so that I might correct the RECORD, but after hearing the discussion I do not think I need to correct it. I believe I was right in the first place.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I would, then, offer a second proviso to the Senator's amendment, which, in substance, would state that if the authorization contained in H. R. 7941, Calendar No. 2048, is reduced for the fiscal years 1952 and 1953, then the appropriation involved in the pending amendment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, will be reduced in the same percentage.

Mr. McCARRAN. I accept that, if the Senator from Utah will accept it.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I am willing to accept that percentage reduction if the reduction referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts takes place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair may state the situation, the Senator from Nevada has asked unanimous consent for the consideration of this item at this time Is unanimous consent granted?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am going to ask that this amendment go over until tomorrow, so that I may have a chance to study it further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator objects at this time, does he?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware objects.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], I ask unanimous consent at this time to propose an amendment to chapter XI of the pending bill, and I ask that it be considered now. I do not believe there will be any objection to it whatsoever after the amendment is explained. It has to do with the antideficiency provision of section 1111 of the pending appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from New Mexico to the fact that under the agreement entered into a short time ago chapter XI is now the subject before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes; and the reason why I suggest this amendment is that the provision which will be concerned with the suggested amendment is the important provision of chapter XI, and I thought possibly we could get unanimous consent to act on the amendment now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico asks unanimous consent that section 1111, chapter XI, page 468, be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I suggest that unanimous consent is not necessary, if we proceed with chapter XI. There is no committee amendment before the place suggested for the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the first amendment which would come up for consideration in chapter XI is on page 468 of the bill. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Under the heading "Departments and agencies," page 468, line 25, after the word "obligation", it is proposed to insert the words "or expenditure."

The amendment was agreed to.

JOINT SENATE AND HOUSE RECORDING FACILITY—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BYRD obtained the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair ask the Senator from Virginia whether his remarks will take some little time?

Mr. BYRD. About 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BENTON] has a conference report, and the Chair had agreed to recognize him to present it when the pending question was disposed of. Will the Senator yield for that purpose?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, I am grateful to the Senator, because I called the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] away from his office while I submitted this conference report.

I submit a conference report on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 332) providing for the establishment of a Joint Senate and House Recording Facility, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 332) providing for the establishment of a Joint Senate and House Recording Faculty, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That (a) there is hereby established a Joint Senate and House Recording Facility (hereinafter referred to as the 'Facility').

"(b) The Facility shall assist Members of the Senate and House of Representatives in making and utilizing disk, film, and tape recordings, and shall maintain and operate upon request a supplementary public address system for the convenience of the Senate and the House (including any committee of either House of Congress, and any joint committee). The recording facilities shall be for the convenience of the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives.

"(c) The Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are hereby authorized, subject to appropriations made therefor, to appoint and fix the compensation of a Superintendent and such other employees as are deemed necessary to perform the functions of the Facility, and shall, subject to the approval of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, and the House Committee on House Administration promulgate such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purpose of this joint resolution. The Coordinator and the employees of the Joint Recording Facility of Congress (appointed pursuant to the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act, 1948) shall continue in office until a Superintendent is appointed.

"(d) The Superintendent shall, subject to regulations promulgated under subsection (c), set the price of all recordings, services, and public address system rentals, and shall collect all moneys due the Facility. All purchase orders of more than $100 shall, before they are issued by the Superintendent, be approved by the Clerk of the House. The Superintendent shall maintain detailed records of all moneys collected, deposited, and expended, and shall file quarterly reports thereof with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House. Such records shall be audited annually, or at such lesser intervals as may be provided in regulations promulgated under subsection (c).

"(e) The Superintendent shall give bond to the Clerk of the House with one or more sureties. Such bond shall be approved by the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, and shall be in the penal sum of $20,000, with condition for the faithful performance of the functions of the Superintendent and for the preservation and security of all property in his care.

"(f) There is hereby established within the contingent fund of the House of Representatives a revolving fund for the Facility. All balances of the Joint Recording Facility of Congress (established pursuant to the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act, 1948) on hand on the date of enactment of this joint resolution, and all moneys hereafter received from any source by the Facility established under subsection (a), shall be deposited in such revolving fund. The moneys in such revolving fund shall be available only for disbursement by the Clerk of the House for the care, maintenance, and operation of the Facility (including the purchase, rental, repair, upkeep, and insurance of such equipment and such other property as may be necessary for the operation of the Facility), upon vouchers signed by the Clerk of the House and approved by the chairman of the House Committee on House Administration; except that no such moneys shall be disbursed for the payment of salaries.

"(g) The Clerk of the House is hereby authorized to disburse from such revolving fund for the purchase of the recording equipment and other property which is now being leased by the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House pursuant to an agreement dated August 1, 1947, such amount (not less than $13,000 nor more than $15,000) as the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration and the House Committee on House Administration may determine to be fair and equitable."

And the Senate agree to the same.

WILLIAM BENTON,
G. M. GILLETTE,
KARL E. MUNDT,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

MARY T. NORTON,
THOS. B. STANLEY,
C. W. BISHOP,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

PROPOSED GRANT OF EMERGENCY POWERS TO PRESIDENT

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, Mr. Baruch has very admirably performed a great patriotic service in his testimony before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. In all of his distinguished career, he has never received a greater tribute than the national response to his plan for mobilization of our industrial economy.

I am inherently opposed to unnecessary governmental regimentation, which, if incompetently administered over a long period, can do much to destroy our system of free enterprise. I have, however, reached the conclusion that I will support stand-by powers to be given to the President, especially for such controls as will prevent disastrous inflation and prepare this Nation for the worst that may follow the crisis in Korea. This means I will support such legislation to be made effective upon proclamation of the President.

I do so, however, with an amendment, which I am offering today to the pending legislation, providing that such powers as are given to the President will expire on July 1, 1951. I offer this amendment because I do not believe such vast powers should be conferred on any Executive for an indefinite period without specific review by Congress. Without an expiration date, the President could veto repeal legislation. It would then require a two-thirds vote in each House to overcome such a veto.

It is by such all-inclusive powers given in time of emergency that democracies are destroyed if the powers extend beyond the period of the actual emergency. If an expiration date is provided in the legislation, it gives Congress an opportunity prior to the expiration date to reconsider the situation in the light of developments and determine whether the powers should be renewed or discontinued.

Let us not fool ourselves about this grant of power. If adopted, it will vest in the hands of the President powers more vast than any President ever had without a declaration of war. Under these powers the President can virtually take control of the domestic economy of our Nation and be an economic dictator.

One other exception I want to make is that if prices are fixed wages likewise should be fixed. All of us recall that in the last war prices were fixed without adequate wage control. Wages constitute 80 or 90 percent of the cost of most articles, and there must be adequate wage control if prices of products—industrial and agricultural—are to be controlled.

We are forced to proper controls now because blunders have precipitated this Nation into one of the most dangerous situations ever to confront us. Today we are fighting an undeclared war in Korea because the South Koreans, who were armed by us and trained by our officers, were unable to repel the North Korean invasion. The same kind of undeclared war can occur in other places throughout the world where we have undertaken to arm and train other nations who may or may not fight when D-day comes. Russia could start these undeclared wars in various parts of the world without firing a Russian gun or losing a Russian solder, compelling us under the Truman doctrine, to send troops, with the result that we may be engaged in many conflicts of such a character thousands of miles apart. It is tragic to contemplate the results of such side-line wars.

To point out the utter stupidity and the unbelievable ineptitude of our actions with respect to the Korean conflict, I cite these instances:

On June 13, 1950, just 2 weeks before the invasion of South Korea, Mr. William C. Foster, Deputy Administrator of the Economic Cooperation Administration, testified before the Senate Appropriations Committee and said:

> I am happy to tell the Appropriations Committee that, in my judgment, the trend of events in South Korea is more favorable than it has been at any time since the liberation of that country in 1945. The reasons for optimism are military, political, and economic. It is my considered opinion that in the face of great difficulty the Government of the Republic of Korea is now steadily gaining strength in each of these three sectors. (1) A rigorous training program has built up a well-disciplined army of 100,000 soldiers, one that is prepared to meet any challenge by North Korean forces, and one that has cleaned out the guerrilla bands in South Korea in one area after another.

Twelve days later the North Koreans invaded South Korea and, with virtually no effort or resistance, captured a large part of the country. Had the South Koreans, who, Mr. Foster said, had a well-disciplined army of 100,000 soldiers prepared to meet any challenge by North Korean forces, courageously resisted, our reinforcements would have been spared the tremendous casualties which have resulted from lack of time to prepare an expeditionary force.

At the proper time it will be appropriate for Congress to investigate upon what grounds Mr. Foster, the Deputy Administrator of the Economic Cooperation Administration, made this statement, and why the South Koreans in the first days of the invasion failed to resist.

I call attention further to the fact that since the American occupation forces were taken from Korea, there has been a substantial military mission there to train the South Korean army.

Still further, Gen. William L. Roberts, head of the United States Military Commission to Korea, told a news conference a few days ago that the South Koreans were not adequately armed because our leaders feared they would attack North Korea and thereby embarrass the United States. He said:

> The South Koreans believed the best method was to attack. To prevent them from attacking we gave them no combat air force, no tanks, and no heavy artillery.

So we have two American leaders, one, Mr. Foster, who said the South Korean army was well trained and equipped and prepared to meet any challenge; the other, the head of the United States Military Commission, who said America did not adequately equip the South Koreans because they might attack the North Koreans.

It is just such contradictions and incompetence as this that have precipitated a crisis of great magnitude. In due time those responsible will be held accountable by the verdict of American public opinion. What we have done in Korea is to demonstrate the ineffectiveness of that part of the Truman doctrine in the protection of small or isolated nations by arming those who are not prepared or willing to fight when the issue comes, and thereby accepting on the part of the United States a commitment to fight such wars wherever and whenever they may occur. I repeat, a dozen sideline wars may occur without Russia showing her hand.

Since the end of World War II we have spent hundreds of millions of dollars in South Korea for relief, occupation and military training. In addition we have transferred great quantities of military equipment, which has not been evaluated. The war that Russia is conducting against America is a war of economic attrition. We have walked into her trap. We have committed ourselves to be involved in civil wars throughout the world and to exhaust our resources, regiment and tax our people while Russia can, and I believe will, remain on the outside.

The free-enterprise system cannot long operate under drastic police controls inefficiently administered. A democracy cannot remain on a war basis for a long period of time and still preserve the stimuli of free enterprise and fiscal solvency.

But today we are faced with facts. We have been driven into a situation in Korea from which we must not retreat, but in all prudence we must consider the possibility, if not the probability, that similar wars will be started elsewhere.

It is for these compelling reasons that I will vote for the Baruch proposals for stand-by power to the President, limited to July 1, 1951. This does not mean, of course, that Congress cannot renew these powers, but such dictatorial economic power over the lives of our citizens should be subject to review by Congress at stated periods.

We are in another emergency which is developing some of the aspects of hysteria, and we hear much about huge new taxes, about all-out regimentation, huge additional expenditures, but we hear little about a reduction in nondefense spending. Reduction of nondefense spending should be placed No. 1 on our mobilization program. Financial preparedness is the source of all preparedness.

Mr. President, I offer the amendment, to lie on the table and to be considered when the proposed legislation comes before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1951

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has requested unanimous consent to take up at this time for immediate consideration an amendment to section 1111 on page 468 of the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Will the Senator offer his amendment?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from New Hampshire

[Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and myself I offer the amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 473, after line 23, it is proposed to insert:

(5) grants to the States under title I, IV, or X of the Social Security Act, or under any other public assistance title in such act.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, this amendment would make definite and certain, in a way which I think the House language perhaps does not, that the Federal contributions to the States for old-age assistance, for the blind, and for dependent children, will not be subject to any finding or determination or any action by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, but that such contributions, being fixed specifically by statute, by statutory formulas, will be paid to the States in the future just as they have been paid in the past.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. In substance the amendment provides that where Federal statutes guarantee that the Federal Government will match certain funds for old-age assistance, and matters of that character, such as mothers' aid, and health matters, the antideficiency provision shall not apply?

Mr. HILL. No; it simply applies to the three categories, of old-age assistance, dependent children, and the blind. But it says where there is a statutory commitment to the States, where the amounts are fixed and determined by statutory formulas, such commitments will be met, and shall not be subject to any finding or any determination by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. As one who was on the other end of the stick for some time in the capacity of Governor, and because of the uncertainty of the Federal appropriations, not always knowing what we should do in the States, I should say that I certainly approve of the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to the adoption of the amendment and to taking it to conference. I have not gone into it yet, and will have to go into it and see what it would do, but I shall be glad to study it. The amendment is certainly very praiseworthy in its purpose. It seems to me at first blush it should be adopted. But before finally agreeing to it, I should like to look at it.

Mr. HILL. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] for himself and other Senators on page 473, after line 23.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Chapter XI—General provisions," on page 469, line 13, after the word "in", to strike out "requirements", and insert "requirements or"; and in line 14, after the word "operations", to strike out the comma and "or other developments".

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 473, line 7, after "(f)", to insert "(1)"; and in line 9, after the word "apportionments", to insert "trust funds and working funds expenditures from which have no significant effect on the financial operations of the Government, working capital and revolving funds established for intragovernmental operations."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 473, after line 23, to strike out:

(5) contingent expenses of the Senate or of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Alabama whether the figure "(5)" in line 24 should not be included in order to cover his amendment. That is on page 473.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The figure "(5)" is included in the amendment adopted a few minutes ago.

Mr. HILL. Yes; it is included in that amendment.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 474, to insert:

(2) The provisions of subsection (c) of this section shall not apply to appropriations to the Senate or House of Representatives or to any Member, committee, Office (including the office of the Architect of the Capitol), officer, or employee thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 474, line 15, after the word "any", to strike out "other"; in line 17, after the word "obligations", to insert "or expenditures"; and in line 21, after the word "obligation", to insert "or the making of any expenditure".

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 474, line 24, after the word "obligation", to insert "or make any expenditure".

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 475, line 23, after the word "act", to insert "including the government of the District of Columbia"; and on page 476, line 1, after the word "on", to strike out "December 31, 1950" and insert "June 30, 1951".

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I understand we are now considering section 1112, beginning on page 475.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. We have just adopted a committee amendment at the top of page 476 in that section.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I have at the desk an amendment to that section, and I offer it at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is required in order to have the amendment considered at this time.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may offer the amendment for consideration at this time.

This section deals with annual leave, and places a limitation on the amount of leave which can be accumulated. My amendment will take care of paying for annual leave when a civilian employee of the Government goes into the armed services.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, let me say that I have not had time to go over the amendment. However, I shall be glad to let it go into the bill at this time, and very carefully examine it and consider it in conference.

Mr. GURNEY. I may say that I have taken up the amendment with the staff of the Appropriations Committee. I am very sorry that I did not have the idea at the time when this section was being considered by the Appropriations Committee. However, at that time the Korean situation had not developed.

I should like to have the Members of the Senate now present hear the amendment stated, if that may be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 475, in line 25, before the word "officer", it is proposed to insert "civilian".

On page 476, before the period in line 4, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following: "And provided further, That this section shall not apply with respect to the payment of compensation for accumulated annual leave in the case of officers or employees who leave their civilian positions for the purpose of entering upon active military or naval service in the Armed Forces of the United States."

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator briefly explain the purpose of the amendment and what is intended to be accomplished by it?

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, the section as reported by the committee limits the amount of annual leave which can be accumulated. If a civilian employee of the Government leaves that service to enter the armed services, then, as I would have the section written, it would allow such a civilian employee to be paid, before he enters the armed services, for the amount of leave he has accumulated.

Mr. BRIDGES. That would be done in view of the fact that he would not be able to take the leave. Is that correct?

Mr. GURNEY. That is correct. The amendment would give such employee the money before he enters the armed services.

Mr. McKELLAR. What would be the cost of putting the amendment into effect?

Mr. GURNEY. I do not know, and I do not think anyone can tell, because I do not believe anyone can say how many civilian employees of the Government will enter the armed services. However, I know that if a person enters any branch of the armed services, he has many extra financial obligations. If he enters the armed services, he will not have time in which to take annual leave.

I know such a person would like to leave a little money at home, and I believe that the Government wants to pay him in cash for leave he cannot take under such circumstances.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. Let me ask the Senator if he has considered whether the language used in his amendment would permit a civilian employee simply to fail to take his leave during the period mentioned in the amendment—that is to say, up to the middle of next year, and perhaps go into the next year, as well—and then at the time when he entered the armed services, be purged of any obligation which would rest upon others.

It seems to me the language of the amendment is broad enough to permit that to be done. I shall not object to the amendment, but I hope it will be carefully considered in conference, and I hope there is included in the amendment language which will effectuate the purpose as outlined by the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let me say that we shall carefully consider it in the conference.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, the purpose is not to give the privilege the Senator from Oregon has mentioned, but only to permit the payment of accumulated leave in case such a person joins the armed services at any time between now and June 30, 1951.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, what is the amount of accumulated leave which such a person might have?

Mr. GURNEY. Whatever is now provided under Federal law in that respect. I believe it is either 60 or 90 days.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I think the amendment is a worthy one. I think accumulated leave should be paid for under such circumstances. I think a person in that situation will need the money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota?

Without objection, the amendment is considered and agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 476, after line 20, to strike out:

SEC. 1114. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the compensation of any incumbent appointed to any civil office or position under the United States Government which may become vacant during the fiscal year beginning on July 1, 1950: Provided, That this inhibition shall not apply—

(a) to not to exceed 10 percent of all such vacancies in any agency caused by separation from such agency,

(b) to positions filled from within the agency,

(c) to offices or positions required by law to be filled by appointment of the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate,

(d) to scientific and technical positions in the Atomic Energy Commission and the Armed Services,

(e) to nurses, doctors, or other medical personnel, including orderlies, in the Public Health Service and the Veterans' Administration,

(f) to law enforcement officers,

(g) to temporary, emergency, seasonal, or cooperative positions,

(h) to commissioned, commissioned warrant, warrant, and enlisted personnel, and cadets of the Coast Guard, and the undergraduates of the United States Military and Naval Academies, or

(i) to any agency in the legislative or judicial branches of the Government, or the municipal government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there is at the desk an amendment which I should like to call up for consideration. The amendment is proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] for himself and 35 other Senators. I wish to call it up at this time, with the following modification: At the bottom of the first page, instead of the words "in lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out on pages 444, 445, and 446," insert "in lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out on pages 476 and 477."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that this is not the proper time to take up that amendment, at this point in the bill. That amendment comes in chapter X.

Mr. BYRD. However, I am offering it to this section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia has offered the amendment heretofore prepared to chapter X of the bill; and it is now offered as an amendment to section 1114, beginning on page 476.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, certain technical changes will be necessary in order to change the chapter numbers appearing on pages 2, 3, and 4 of the amendment.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, does this amendment take the place of the committee amendment on page 477?

Mr. BYRD. It takes the place of the part of it which would be stricken out by the committee amendment on pages 476 and 477.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is offered to take the place of the committee amendment which is designed to strike out section 1114 as it appears in the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. In other words, it amends that committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly; and it does so by including the language which is proposed to be stricken out by the committee amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this amendment is in order, I am sure. Although it contains legislation, yet it amends a provision which contains legislation, that provision having been placed in the bill by the House of Representatives.

I should like to have a ruling by the Chair as to whether or not the amendment is in order. I am advised by the Parliamentarian that the House provision, which is thus proposed to be stricken, is legislation, and likewise this amendment contains legislation.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, of course, this amendment will take some time to dispose of. It was not known that it would be offered today. I think the amendment should go over.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. There is no objection to having the amendment go over until tomorrow and be considered then. But I think the ruling of the Chair should be made now.

Mr. McFARLAND. I do not know about that, Mr. President. I have not had an opportunity to study the amendment. I may wish to offer a point of order. So I think the ruling on the amendment should go over until tomorrow. I do not propose that it be ruled upon at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the Chair calls attention to the fact that he is one of the sponsors of this amendment, as originally offered; and he would prefer to have the ruling on it made by the Vice President.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BYRD. As I understand, the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's amendment has been offered, and the amendment will come up at such time as the Senator may request the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BYRD. Under the unanimous-consent agreement adopted today, when will this amendment come up?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment just offered by the Senator from Virginia will come up immediately after the disposal of the so-called McCarran amendment, relating to aid to Spain.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. This afternoon I asked that very question. The majority leader stated that he intended to finish the ECA chapter, not only to vote on the McCarran amendment, but also to vote on the entire chapter, before returning to the pending chapter. It so happens that the point of order which has been raised is the pending question. But certainly it would be my understanding of the request of the majority leader, before we entered into the unanimous-consent agreement, that the chapter on ECA, including the McCarran amendment, would be completed before we returned to the pending chapter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that, under the new unanimous-consent agreement entered into today, after the disposal of the McCarran amendment, the Senate will then immediately dispose of chapter X–B, as amended.

Mr. WHERRY. That is according to the understanding of the Senator from Nebraska, who also understands that the Senate will thereafter return to the chapter now pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. After which time the amendment just offered by the Senator from Virginia would become the order of the business.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly. So as I understand the statement of the present occupant of the Chair, what he said a moment ago was correct, except that the complete chapter on ECA would be voted on, as amended, and the Senate would then return to the point where it leaves off tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. McFARLAND. That was not what the Chair stated. The Chair stated that we would return to chapter X–B, after completing the chapter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. X–B is the chapter on ECA, the Chair will state to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McFARLAND. Is it not chapter X–A?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; it is X–B.

Mr. McFARLAND. Has not chapter X–A been disposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Chapter X–A has gone over for later consideration. The Chair feels it is only fair to state that his understanding is that the McCarran amendment will be voted on first, under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into this afternoon, which is a modification of the earlier unanimous-consent agreement; that, following that, the entire section, chapter X–B, which deals with ECA and allied subjects, will be disposed of, and that, thereafter, the pending question will be on the proposal made by the Senator from Virginia to amend section 1114 of chapter XI of the bill.

REDUCTION OF EXCISE TAXES—AMENDMENT

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the pending tax bill. I should like to call this amendment the Korean Excess-Profits Tax Amendment. The purpose of the provision which I am now offering is to help the Government of the United States pay as it goes on the very expensive adventure upon which it has been launched by the aggressive actions of the Communists in Korea. I do not need now to take the time of the Senate to explain the amendment. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the amendment, together with a copy of the statement which I am releasing to the press this evening, may be printed at length in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received, printed, and referred to the Committee on Finance; and, without objection, the amendment and statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment and statement are as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following new title:

"TITLE VII—EXCESS-PROFITS TAX

"SEC. 701. Reapplication of excess-profits tax.

"(a) Reapplication: Section 122 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1945 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(a) In general: The provisions of subchapter E of chapter 2 shall not apply to any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1945, and ending prior to January 1, 1950. The provisions of part III of such subchapter shall not apply to any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1945.'

"(b) Rate of tax: Section 710 (a) (1) (A) of the Internal Revenue Code is amended to read as follows:

"'(A) Sixty five percent of such part of the adjusted excess profits net income as exceeds 75 percent but is less than 90 percent of the excess profits credit determined under section 712, plus

"'Seventy-five percent of such part of the adjusted excess profits net income as exceeds 90 percent but is less than 100 percent of the excess profits credit determined under section 712, plus.

"'Ninety percent of such part of the adjusted excess profits net income as exceeds 100 percent but is less than 125 percent of the excess profits credit determined under section 712, plus

"'One hundred percent of the adjusted excess profits net income as exceeds 125 percent of the excess profits credit determined under section 712; or.'

"(c) Exemption: Section 710 (b) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(1) Specific Exemption.—A specific exemption of $25,000.'

"(d) Excess profits credit: Subsections (a) and (b) of section 712 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to allowance of exces profits credit) are hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(a) Domestic Corporations.—In the case of a domestic corporation which was in existence before January 1, 1950, the excess profits credit for any taxable year shall be computed under section 713 or section 714, whichever amount results in the lesser tax under this subchapter for the taxable year for which the tax under this subchapter is being computed. In the case of all other domestic corporations, the excess profits credit for any taxable year shall be an amount computed under section 714.

"'(b) Foreign corporations: In the case of a foreign corporation engaged in trade or business within the United States, the first taxable year of which under this subchapter begins on any date in 1950, which was in existence on the day 36 months prior to such date and which at any time during each of the taxable years in such 36 months was engaged in trade or business within the United States, the excess-profits credit for any taxable year shall be an amount computed under section 713 or section 714, whichever amount results in the lesser tax under this subchapter for the taxable year for which the tax under this subchapter is being computed. In the case of all other foreign corporations the excess-profits credit for any taxable year shall be an amount computed under section 714.'

"(e) Definition of unused excess-profits credit: Section 710 (c) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code is hereby amended by striking out the last two sentences thereof and by inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'For the purposes of the determination of the taxes imposed by this subchapter for taxable years beginning before January 1, 1946, there shall be no unused excess-profits credit for a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1946. The unused excess-profits credit for a taxable year beginning in 1946 and ending in 1947 shall be an amount which is such part of the unused excess-profits credit determined under the preceding provisions of this paragraph as the number of days in such taxable year prior to January 1, 1947, is of the total number of days in such taxable year. For the purposes of the determination of the taxes imposed by this subchapter for taxable years ending after December 31, 1949, there shall be no unused excess-profits credit for a taxable year ending before July 1, 1950. The unused excess-profits credit for a taxable year beginning in 1949 or 1950 and ending after June 30, 1950, shall be an amount which is such part of the unused excess-profits credit determined under the preceding provisions of this paragraph as the number of days in such taxable year after June 30, 1950, is of the total number of days in such taxable year.'

"(f) No carry-back to 1946, 1947, 1948, or 1949: Section 710 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'(5) No carry-back to 1946, 1947, 1948, or 1949: For purposes of the determination of the taxes imposed by this subchapter for taxable years ending after December 31, 1949, the term "preceding taxable year" and the term "preceding taxable years," as used in this subsection, do not include any taxable year ending prior to January 1, 1950.'

"(g) Amount of excess-profits credit: Section 713 (a) (relating to the amount of excess-profits credit) is amended by striking out '95 percent' wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "75 percent."

"(h) Definition of 'base period': Section 713 (b) (1) is amended to read as follows:

"'(1) Definition: As used in this section the term "base period"—

"'(A) If the corporation was in existence during the whole of the 36 months preceding the beginning of its first taxable year under this subchapter after December 31, 1949, means the period commencing with the beginning of its first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1946, and ending with the close of its last taxable year beginning before January 1, 1949; and

"'(B) In the case of a corporation which was in existence during only part of the 36 months preceding the beginning of its first taxable year under this subchapter after December 31, 1949, means the 36 months preceding the beginning of its first taxable year under this subchapter.'

"(i) Taxable years beginning in 1949 or 1950 and ending prior to June 30, 1951: Section 710 (a) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"'(8) Taxable years beginning in 1949 and ending in 1950: In the case of a taxable year beginning in 1949 and ending in 1950, the tax shall be an amount equal to that portion of a tentative tax, computed as if the law applicable to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1949, were applicable to such taxable year, which the number of days in such taxable year after June 30, 1950, bears to the total number of days in such taxable year.

"'(9) Taxable years beginning after December 31, 1949, and ending prior to June 30, 1951: In the case of a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1949, and ending prior to June 30, 1951, the tax shall be an amount equal to that portion of a tentative tax which the number of days in such taxable year after June 30, 1950, bears to the total number of days in such taxable year.'

"(j) Technical amendments: The following sections of the Internal Revenue Code are restored to read as such sections read immediately prior to the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1945, to be effective as so restored, with respect to taxable years ending after December 31, 1949, as if section 122 (g) of the Revenue Act of 1945 had not been enacted:

"(1) Section 26 (a) (relating to the credit for income subject to the excess-profits tax);

"(2) Section 102 (d) (1) (defining terms for the purpose of the tax imposed by section 102);

"(3) Section 131 (b) (prescribing certain limitations on the foreign tax credit);

"(k) Taxable years to which amendments applicable: The amendments made to the Internal Revenue Code by this title shall be applicable with respect to taxable years ending after December 31, 1949.

"(l) Technical changes: The Commissioner is authorized to make such changes in the dates and the periods of time appearing in subchapter E of chapter 2 of the Internal Revenue Code as may be necessary to conform to the amendments made by this title."

On page 50, line 18, before the period insert the following: "reduced by the credit for income subject to the tax imposed by subchapter E of chapter 2 provided in subsection (e)."

On page 88, strike out lines 24 and 25 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(A) the credit for income subject to the tax imposed by subchapter E of chapter 2 provided in section 26 (e) and the credit for dividends received provided in section 26 (b)."

On page 89, strike out lines 24 and 25 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(1) The credit for income subject to the tax imposed by subchapter E of chapter 2 provided in section 26 (e) and the credit for dividends received provided in section 26 (b) (computed by limiting such credit to 85 percent of the net income reduced by the credit for income subject to the tax imposed by subchapter E of chapter 2 in lieu of 85 percent of the adjusted net income so reduced)."

On page 94, strike out lines 22 through 25, and on page 95, strike out lines 1 through 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(7) Section 204 (a) (2) (relating to definition of normal tax net income and corporation surtax net income of foreign insurance companies other than life or mutual) is amended to read as follows:

"'(2) Normal-tax and corporation surtax net income of foreign insurance companies other than life or mutual and foreign mutual marine: In the case of a foreign insurance company (other than a life or mutual insurance company) and a foreign mutual marine insurance company, and a foreign mutual fire insurance company described in paragraph (1) of this subsection, the normal-tax net income shall be the net income from sources within the United States minus the credit provided in section 26 (a), the credit provided in section 26 (b), and the credit for income subject to the tax imposed by subchapter E of chapter 2 provided in section 26 (e), and the corporation surtax net income shall be the net income from sources within the United States minus the credit provided in section 26 (b) (computed by limiting such credit to 85 percent of the net income reduced by the credit for income subject to the tax imposed by subchapter E of chapter 2 in lieu of 85 percent of the adjusted net income so reduced) minus the credit provided in section 26 (j), and minus the credit for income subject to the tax imposed by subchapter E of chapter 2 provided in section 26 (e).'"

At the end of the table of contents, on page 7, insert the following:

"TITLE VII—EXCESS-PROFITS TAX

"SEC. 701. Reapplication of excess-profits tax.

"(a) Reapplication.

"(b) Rate of tax.

"(c) Exemption.

"(d) Excess-profits credit.

"(e) Definition of unused excess-profits credit.

"(f) No carry-back to 1946, 1947, 1948, or 1949.

"(g) Amount of excess-profits credit.

"(h) Definition of base period.

"(i) Taxable years beginning in 1949 or 1950 and ending prior to June 30, 1951.

"(j) Technical amendments.

"(k) Taxable years to which amendments applicable.

"(l) Technical changes."

STATEMENT BY SENATOR O'MAHONEY UPON OFFERING THE EXCESS-PROFITS AMENDMENT

Believing that an excess-profits tax immediately imposed would be the best answer that capitalism could give to Communist propaganda. I have today introduced such an amendment to the pending tax bill which I shall urge upon the Finance Committee.

There has never been any doubt in the minds of the American public since the first excess-profits tax was imposed during the First World War that no part of the population should be permitted to reap huge profits out of war while another part was suffering and sacrificing in military uniform. The imposition of the excess-profits tax has always been resisted by those who were reluctant to give up the opportunity for great profit arising out of the business created by Government expenditures to raise, equip, and maintain the fighting force. The reaction of the public and of business leadership to the Korean crisis convinces me that this opposition has now practically disappeared. We know now that the war profiteer and the speculator must be eliminated if we are to adopt a pay-as-you-go policy for this war.

Inflation, while it will make profits for the lucky speculator and the lucky profiteer, will take more out of the pockets of all of the people than any tax. This is so because inflation vastly increases the cost of living as well as the cost of defense.

With a national debt at $257,000,000,000, we can't think of postponing the payment of Government expenditures for the Korean war to future generations; we must be willing to make the sacrifice necessary on the home front to meet the cost now.

Fortunately the rate of corporate profits has been running at an extraordinary level since the shooting of World War II stopped and corporate profits before taxes which were running around $25,000,000,000 during World War II reached a peak of 36.6 billions in 1948. The last 5 years have been the most prosperous years in our history: wages, salaries, profits, as well as prices have been up. We have been living in a luxury economy and I see no reason why we would not sacrifice some of these luxuries to pay for the war.

The excess-profits-tax rate in the amendment I have introduced is computed upon the base of 75 percent of the average profits of 1947, 1948, and 1949. A step scale is provided which is intended not only to take a fair share of the corporate net income above 75 percent of the average for these 3 years, but at the same time not to provide an inducement to waste and inefficiency.

The rate schedule is as follows: 65 percent of net income above 75 percent of the base and not above 90 percent, 75 percent of net income above 90 percent of the base and not above 100 percent, 90 percent of net income above 100 percent of the base and not above 125 percent, 100 percent of net income above 125 percent of the base.

I was of the opinion that the average profits of the 3 years 1947, 1948, and 1949 would be altogether too high a base from which to compute excess-profits tax. The base which I have selected, 75 percent of the 3 years 1947, 1948, and 1949, is roughly four times higher than the level of corporate profits before taxes prior to World War II and is practically equal to the level of profits during World War II.

Although for technical reasons the amendment applies the tax rate to the whole of the calendar year 1950, a provision has been inserted so that only 50 percent of the tax for 1950 is payable. This prorata provision is designed to make the tax effective on July 1, 1950, to all intents and purposes at the time the Korean war broke out.

The amendment is drawn upon the structure of the World War II excess-profits tax. It preserves the invested capital formula and the net income formula provided in sections 713 and 714 of the Internal Revenue Code and it also preserves the credit provisions of section 722 to take care of extraordinary individual cases to which the specific formula would not apply.

AUTHORIZATION FOR SIGNING OF HOUSE BILL 7273

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Vice President be authorized and permitted to sign House bill 7273 during the recess of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Snader, its assistant reading clerk, announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

H. R. 4942. An act to regulate the collection and disbursement of moneys realized from leases made by the Seneca Nation of Indians of New York, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7273. An act to provide a civil government for Guam, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7764. An act to authorize the construction of modern naval vessels, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 8139. An act to authorize the attendance of the United States Marine Band at the annual reunion of the United Confederate Veterans to be held in Biloxi, Miss., September 27 through September 30, 1950.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9178) to suspend restrictions on the authorized personnel strength of the Armed Forces, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred, as indicated:

REPORT ON INTERNATIONAL INFORMATION AND EDUCATIONAL EXCHANGE PROGRAM

A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the United States International Information and Educational Exchange Program, for the period July 1 to December 31, 1949 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

GENERAL REVISION OF NAVIGATION LAWS

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to revise, consolidate, and codify the navigation laws relating to admeasurement, documentation, entry, clearance, coastwise trade, foreign trade, and United States fisheries, and for other purposes (with an accompanying document); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORT ON CANADIAN RIVER PROJECT, TEXAS

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, his report on the Canadian River project in Texas (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

REGULATION AND CONTROL OF AIR COMMERCE

A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the Civil Aeronautics Board and the Secretary of Commerce to undertake security measures relative to the regulation and control of air commerce when authorized by the President in times of national emergency (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPORT OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ON RATES OF RETURN FOR CERTAIN COMPANIES

A letter from the Acting Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report entitled "Rates of Return for 529 Identical Companies in 25 Selected Manufacturing Industries, 1940, 1947–49," prepared by the Commission, dated June 27, 1950 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

FINANCIAL AID TO STUDENTS IN HIGHER EDUCATION

A letter from the Administrator, Federal Security Agency, Washington, D. C., transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to establish a program of financial aid to students in higher education, and for other purposes (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

DEFENSE OF SOUTH KOREA—RESOLUTION OF FEDERATED TRADES AND LABOR ASSEMBLY OF DULUTH, MINN.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have recently received a resolution from the Federated Trades and Labor Assembly of Duluth, Minn., expressing its support of the President's courageous action in the Korean situation. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be printed in the RECORD, and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEDERATED TRADES AND LABOR ASSEMBLY,
Duluth, Minn., July 25, 1950.

The Honorable HUBERT H. HUMPHREY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Duluth Federated Trades and Labor Assembly in session July 14, 1950, passed the following resolution:

"Be it resolved, That the Duluth Federated Trades and Labor Assembly in meeting held on Friday, July 14, 1950, go on record as commending President Truman for the courageous stand he has taken in the defense of South Korea."

Respectfully yours,

CLARK KENNEDY,
Secretary.

TRANSPORTATION IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE—RESOLUTIONS OF LABOR UNIONS OF MINNESOTA

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I want to bring to the attention of the Senate the fact that a number of resolutions have just come to me endorsed by a number of labor unions in my State. I refer particularly to local 3842 of the United Steelworkers of America, CIO, Albert Lea, Minn.; local No. 36, Faribault, Minn.; local No. 6, Albert Lea, Minn.; local No. 55, Newport, Minn.; and local No. 9, Austin, Minn., all of the United Packinghouse Workers of America, CIO; and local 845 of the Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, A. F. of L., of Albert Lea, Minn.

These unions, Mr. President, express their support for H. R. 7983, a bill introduced by Congressman O'SULLIVAN, of Nebraska, which forbids transportation in interstate commerce of any product of a firm or individual refusing to bargain fairly and in good faith with its employees or indulging in any form of unfair labor practice.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

POLICIES AND PROCEDURES OF SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE ARMED SERVICES COMMITTEE—STATEMENT BY SENATOR JOHNSON OF TEXAS

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an excellent statement made today before the Senate Armed Services investigating subcommittee by the able chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON].

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR JOHNSON OF TEXAS, CHAIRMAN, SENATE ARMED SERVICES INVESTIGATING SUBCOMMITTEE, JULY 31, 1950

POLICIES AND PROCEDURES OF SUBCOMMITTEE

Members of the subcommittee, this meeting has been called for the purpose of discussing the organization and procedures of our subcommittee. Our chairman late Thursday announced the personnel to the Senate, and this is our first chance to meet. This statement represents my own thinking about our work.

Our assigned task is clearly defined in the resolution adopted unanimously by the full committee. We are asked to exercise both a continuous watchfulness and a continuous study of "all policies, programs, activities, operations, facilities, requirements, and practices" of the Department of Defense, the armed services, and other agencies dealing with the national security in general and our present preparedness effort in particular.

We are specifically directed to determine whether such policies and practices are "the most effective possible" and to determine whether the administration of such policies is "characterized by maximum efficiency."

If we carry out our assignment diligently and impartially, I am confident that the subcommittee's work can be of substantial benefit to the Armed Services Committee, to the Senate, to the agencies dealing with the national security, and to the national welfare.

Toward that end I would like to offer several suggestions which reflect my own thinking about certain guideposts of conduct which we should keep in mind as we outline our work.

I. We will not hunt headlines. We will handicap—not help—our chances for success if we exploit the sensational rather than develop the substantial. It is my thought that the committee's work will be conducted primarily in executive sessions. Our reports will be reports to the full committee; we will not report directly to the Senate or the public.

II. It is my sincere hope that politics can be left at the committee-room door. Our full committee has maintained a fine record of nonpartisanship. I hope we can emphasize unanimity so that here, at least, the Senate and public can expect to find uncolored, unemotional facts.

III. Most important, I think this subcommittee must be extremely diligent not to establish—or attempt to establish—itself as a Monday morning quarterback club, second-guessing battlefront strategy. We were not created to tell the generals and admirals how to fight the battles, but rather to make sure that they and the men fighting under them have what they need to win those battles. Battlefront strategy is not a part of our duties and so long as I am chairman we will not get into that question.

IV. Especially, I have confidence that the subcommittee will, in all its inquiries and recommendations, be frank, impartial, and straightforward—blunt but not unfair, zealous but not persecuting, helpful but not compromising.

If we adhere to these basic rules, I believe we can be successful.

We are, of course, a subcommittee of a regular standing committee of the Senate. We shall function in that capacity only without usurping duties that are not ours and without infringing upon jurisdiction we do not possess. Wherever necessary and whenever practicable, we should not hesitate to communicate information developed by our work to other Senate committees which might be interested and helpful.

Furthermore, we will not overlap the duties assigned to certain standing committees of our full committee—such as the Subcommittee on Civil Defense and the Subcommittee on Stockpiling. In all instances we should work harmoniously and with the fullest possible cooperation with all others who may be of assistance to us in our duties.

Our funds at present are limited to $25,000. With that amount, we cannot employ any large staff of investigators.

There is no reason, however, that we cannot function successfully with our present professional staff serving as the nucleus for our initial studies and with the assistance of experts from the various agencies. As our needs become apparent, we can make our needs known to the chairman of the full committee.

Of course, I believe additional clerical assistance will be needed immediately—and I hope arrangements can be made for an assignment of office space to our subcommittee.

During the past few days many Senators and Congressmen have raised the question with me about where the money appropriated for defense during the past 4 years has gone. This question, of course, is on all our minds.

In 1946 the United States completed one of the most hurried and most thorough military demobilization programs ever instituted by a major world power.

During the four fiscal years since we have spent $48,440,000,000 on the military functions of the Department of Defense. This, of course, has been a record peacetime outlay for defense purposes.

Because this amount has been unprecedented, because the burden has been heavy and irritating, the setbacks in Korea have prompted many people to ask now, "Where did the money go?"

There is no secret about the answer. Our program of defense spending has been designed, discussed, debated, decided, and put into effect in full public view.

Most of our defense dollars have gone to maintenance costs. The cold war was primarily a maintenance operation, high lighted by the heavy costs of occupying many foreign countries.

This is supported by the breakdown of the $48,440,000,000 spent from July 1, 1946, to June 30, 1950, on the military functions of the Department of Defense.

Utilization of new obligational authority for the military functions of the Department of Defense, July 1, 1946–June 30, 1950

	Billions of dollars	Percent
Military personnel costs (pay, food, clothing, etc.)	19.86	41.0
Maintenance and operation (of aircraft, ships, installations, etc.)	12.78	26.4
Major procurement (weapons, planes, ships, etc.)	8.53	17.6
Research and development	2.25	4.6
Civilian components (National Guard and Reserves)	1.86	3.8
Service-wide administration and classified projects	1.39	2.9
Retired pay	.78	1.6
Military public works	.49	1.0
Mobilization and war readiness	.39	.8
Other	.11	.2
Total	48.44	100.0

Major procurement, July 1, 1946–June 30, 1950

Aircraft	$6,260,000,000
Ships	810,000,000
Other (weapons, combat vehicles, etc.)	1,460,000,000
Total	8,530,000,000

Service-wide administration and classified projects

Includes:

(a) Costs of Department of Defense administration at Washington, D. C., and at headquarters of major commands (Army areas, naval districts, sea frontier commands, Air Force major commands).

(b) Transportation of dependents, baggage and household effects of civilian employees upon permanent change of station.

(c) General Printing Office printing and binding.

(d) Field expenses of service-wide fiscal or finance activities such as accounting, disbursing and cost inspection.

(e) Costs of joint schools and joint planning ventures.

(f) Inter-American relations.

(g) Military missions and attachés.

(h) Classified projects (such as atomic bomb tests).

(i) Claims.

(j) Island governments.

(k) Petroleum reserves.

(l) Foreign exchange losses.

(m) Naval Home, Naval Observatory and Hydrographic Office.

Public works construction (includes military housing)

Includes all costs of land acquisition, engineering planning and design, field engineering and inspection, and construction of buildings, structures, roads and walks, utilities plants and systems, facilities, and appurtenances to real estate in the United States and overseas for which enabling legislation is required.

Mobilization and war readiness

Includes all costs of maintenance and inspection of military reserve plants; acquisition, rehabilitation, and storage of machine tools and production equipment; industry preparedness measures (phantom orders, pilot production, planning surveys, etc.) and wartime planning within the Department of Defense.

What does this breakdown indicate?

Two of each five defense dollars were spent on military personnel costs such as pay, food, clothing, and transportation.

One and one-fourth of each five defense dollars went for overhead costs, such as maintenance and operation of aircraft, ships, installations, and other necessary expenses.

This means that substantially more than half of our defense outlay, approximately $3.25 from each $5, was paid out just to keep our manpower fed, clothed, housed, and paid.

One of each five defense dollars has been spread thin across such essential activities as research and development on new weapons, maintenance of the National Guard and Reserves, administrative work and classified projects such as the atomic bomb tests, retired pay, military public works, planning for mobilization and war readiness, and other such work.

Less than one of each five defense dollars—in fact, only about 75 cents—has been used to procure weapons, ships, and planes.

These figures are rounded and approximate, but they tell the story of where the money has gone.

That is the answer to where the money has gone. We are not concerned with hindsight—we are concerned with foresight.

What's done, is done. We want to make sure that in the future enough is done, soon enough, to assure the defeat of aggression wherever it may appear.

There are many phases of the preparedness effort to which our attention might be turned beneficially—such as procurement, unification, morale and discipline, manpower utilization, research and development, training, medical services, government production, industrial mobilization, occupation policies, civilian personnel, defense of the United States, and others.

At present, it occurs to me that a helpful survey, to be undertaken promptly with the hope of an early report, could be made to determine the armed services' plan for the build-up of both manpower and matériel and their plans for fighting any other fires that may break out in the world. This would acquaint us with the scope of the mobilization effort with which we are expected to deal.

Furthermore, a survey into the many phases of this program would provide us with useful information about the state of planning for any additional fires that may break out, the pace at which military mobilization is proceeding to prepare us to fight these fires, and the bottlenecks retarding our preparedness effort. Without knowledge of these planning features of the military program, we might waste valuable time and energy groping in the dark—and I do not think this is an opportune time for our subcommittee to go on fishing trips.

In suggesting this, I am merely offering my personal opinion, but I hope we can use this as a base to formulate some tentative program at this first meeting.

There is a tremendous and important job for us to do. If we are to do it well, we should begin promptly and pursue our work diligently without let-up.

We need facts, the Congress needs facts—the people want facts. I hope that all Members of the Senate will assist us freely by supplying information and suggestions that may be helpful. Also, I hope people in the Government, members of the press, and the general public will assist us with information which would be useful in making our efforts successful.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. McFARLAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Edward Weinfeld, of New York, to be United States district judge for the southern district of New York; favorably;

Eugene John Pajakowski, of Indiana, to be United States marshal for the northern district of Indiana; favorably;

Carroll O. Switzer, of Iowa, to be United States district judge for the southern district of Iowa; adversely, with the recommendation that the nomination be not confirmed; and

M. Neil Andrews, of Georgia, to be United States district judge for the northern district of Georgia; adversely, with the recommendation that the nomination be not confirmed.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

Vice Adm. Edward L. Cochrane; United States Navy (retired), to be a member of the Federal Maritime Board for the term expiring June 30, 1952.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations under the heading "New Reports" on the calendar.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Paul M. Herzog to be a member of the National Labor Relations Board.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I take very great pleasure in voting for the confirmation of the nomination of Paul M. Herzog. He received his first important political appointment from me, during the time I was Governor of New York, when I appointed him a member of the original State labor relations board in 1937. Later, in 1940, he became chairman of the State labor relations board, and served until he was called to Washington to assume a place on the National Labor Relations Board.

He did a splendid piece of work during the long period of his service in New York State, a service which has been duplicated in quality and in excellence by his service to the Federal Government. I think he has shown great ability, high character, imagination, loyalty, and industry throughout the years of his service, and I feel that the Nation is very fortunate that President Truman was able to persuade Chairman Herzog to accept the appointment at his hands a few days ago.

There is a further personal reason why I am so pleased and happy to have the opportunity of voting to confirm this nomination. I have known Paul Herzog ever since he was a very small child. As a matter of fact, his grandfather was the family physician to my own parents 70 or 75 years ago. I have, of course, known the family for many, many years. During all the period of my acquaintance with Paul Herzog, I have been impressed with the quality of his character, the quality of his selfless devotion to duty, and his willingness to serve his fellow citizens. It gives me very great personal and official pleasure to have the opportunity of voting for the confirmation of his nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Ewan Clague to be Commissioner of Labor Statistics.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES AIR FORCE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Joseph Frederick Green to be second lieutenant in the Air Force, with date of rank June 2, 1950.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. McFARLAND. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, August 1, 1950, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JULY 31, 1950

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Reverend Joe Weldon Bailey, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Sulphur Springs, Tex., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Father, we come to Thee today especially within our hearts, with gratefulness and thanksgiving for all of the blessings Thou hast given us, blessings we have received as individuals, blessings that have been ours collectively as a Nation and as a world. We thank Thee, our Father, because we know that every good and perfect gift cometh from above; and as we stand here in this sacred place this afternoon we do pray that we as citizens may have wisdom to do and to know Thy will, and that these who are leaders of our country may likewise have wisdom that comes only as we come to Thee and welcome Thy love; and we pray for the deliberations of this day, that all thoughts said and done may be to the honor and glory of Thy great and holy name.

Bless everyone who is here, O God, today; and may, as we recognize the importance of this hour, we turn unto Thee for help and for strength. We pray in the name of the Son of God and for His sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, July 27, 1950, was read and approved.

And an enrolled bill of the Senate as follows:

S. 3859. An act to authorize the President to control the anchorage and movement of foreign-flag vessels in waters of the United States when the national security of the United States is endangered, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

On July 26, 1950:

H. R. 5866. An act to adjust and define the boundary between Great Smoky Mountains National Park and the Cherokee-Pisgah-Nantahala National Forests, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 7477. An act providing for the conveyance to the town of Nahant, Mass., of the Fort Ruckman Military Reservation.

On July 28, 1950:

H. R. 3506. An act for the relief of Louis P. Murphy, United States immigrant inspector, El Paso, Tex.; and

H. J. Res. 513. Joint resolution to authorize the burial in the National Cemetery at Nashville, Tenn., of the bodies of members of the Tennessee Air National Guard killed in a plane crash near Myrtle Beach, S. C., July 23, 1950.

On July 31, 1950:

H. R. 940. An act to authorize construction of the Eklutna project, hydroelectric generating plant and transmission facilities in connection therewith, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 512. Joint resolution making further temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1951, and for other purposes.

RESTRICTIONS ON THE AUTHORIZED PERSONNEL STRENGTH OF THE ARMED FORCES.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 9178) to suspend restrictions on the authorized personnel strength of the Armed Forces, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment as follows:

Line 9, after "suspended" insert "until July 31, 1954."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain this amendment?

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, under the House bill there was no limit. Under the Senate amendment it provides that the suspension shall exist until the date stated in the amendment, in 1954. As a matter of fact, the whole subject has got to be considered in July 1951, the date of the expiration of the Draft Act.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This is agreeable to Members on both sides of the aisle?

Mr. VINSON. It is.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the statement made by the gentleman from Georgia, at the time the bill was before the House the gentleman assured the House this question would come under scrutiny by the Congress in July 1951.

Mr. VINSON. That is correct.

Mr. COLE of New York. The gentleman reiterates that as being his position in spite of the fact that the proposed amendment places the time limit in 1954?

Mr. VINSON. The act expires on July 1, 1951, and notwithstanding this amendment this whole subject must be reconsidered at that time.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. If this expires in 1951, why do you have the date 1954?

Mr. VINSON. I am agreeing to the Senate amendment because it has been put in there by the Senate. It does not make any difference whether it is in or out. It is just a question of going ahead and agreeing to the amendment. It is all right. There would not be any harm if it were not in there at all and it cannot make any difference one way or the other.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman is going to see that the whole business is reviewed next year?

Mr. VINSON. We have to review it under the law anyway.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION OF MODERN NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 7764) to authorize the construction of modern naval vessels, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out "and directed."

Page 1, line 10, strike out "and directed."

Page 2, line 7, preceding "Sums", insert: "Construction authorized by this section shall be chargeable against tonnages authorized by existing law."

Page 2, line 13, after "appropriated", insert: "not to exceed."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain these amendments?

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, one Senate amendment strikes out the words "and directed." When the House passed the bill we used the language: "The President is authorized and directed." The Senate did not like the word "direct." The words "authorization" and "authorize" and "direct" are practically the same thing. So we ask that the amendment of the Senate be agreed to. The other amendment relates to tonnage on the books. This tonnage is charged against the tonnage that was authorized in 1938. Instead of additional tonnage it is just charged against the tonnage of 1938. There is still left on the books about a million or two tons of naval construction; that is merely just charged against it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And there is no new construction authorized at all?

Mr. VINSON. Oh, yes; there is a good deal of new construction.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I mean, additional construction to what has already been authorized.

Mr. VINSON. This is authorizing two-hundred-and-some-odd ships, and this amendment was not to make it against the tonnage authorized, but against the tonnage previously authorized.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And that is agreeable to both sides of the Committee on Armed Services?

Mr. VINSON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES MARINE BAND

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 8139) to authorize the attendance of the United States Marine Band at the annual reunion of the United Confederate Veterans to be held in Biloxi, Miss., September 27 through September 30, 1950, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the attendance of the United States Navy Band at the annual reunion of the United Confederate Veterans to be held in Biloxi, Miss., September 27 through September 30, 1950."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman please explain the Senate amendments?

Mr. VINSON. As the bill passed the House, it authorized the Marine Band to go to this reunion, and this substitutes the Navy Band.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I certainly have no objection to that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR GUAM

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7273) to provide a civil government for Guam, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments there, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

"SEC. 22. (a) There is hereby created a court of record to be designated the "District Court of Guam", and the judicial authority of Guam shall be vested in the District Court of Guam and in such court or courts as may have been or may hereafter be established by the laws of Guam. The District Court of Guam shall have, in all causes arising under the laws of the United States, the jurisdiction of a district court of the United States as such court is defined in section 451 of title 28, United States Code, and shall have original jurisdiction in all other causes in Guam, jurisdiction over which has not been transferred by the legislature to other court or courts established by it, and shall have such appellate jurisdiction as the legislature may determine. The jurisdiction of and the procedure in the courts of Guam other than the District Court of Guam shall be prescribed by the laws of Guam.

"(b) The rules heretofore or hereafter promulgated and made effective by the Supreme Court of the United States pursuant to section 2072 of title 28, United States Code, in civil cases; section 2073 of title 28, United States Code, in admiralty cases; sections 3771 and 3772 of title 18, United States Code, in criminal cases; and section 30 of the Bankruptcy Act of July 1, 1898, as amended (title 11, U. S. C., sec. 53), in bankruptcy cases; shall apply to the District Court of Guam and to appeals therefrom.

"SEC. 23. (a) The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit shall have jurisdiction of appeals from all final decisions of the District Court of Guam in all cases involving the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States or any authority exercised thereunder, in all habeas corpus proceedings, and in all other civil cases where the value in controversy exceeds $5,000, exclusive of interest and costs.

"(b) Any party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from an interlocutory or final judgment, or order of the District Court of Guam, holding an act of Congress unconstitutional in any civil action, suit, or proceeding to which the United States or any of its agencies or any officer or employee thereof, as such officer or employee, is a party. A party who has received notice of appeal under this section shall take any subsequent appeal or cross appeal to the Supreme Court. All appeals or cross appeals taken to other courts prior to such notice shall be treated as taken directly to the Supreme Court.

"SEC. 24. (a) The President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a judge for the District Court of Guam who shall hold office for the term of 4 years and until his successor is chosen and qualified unless sooner removed by the President for cause. The judge shall receive a salary payable by the United States which shall be the same as the salary of the Governor of Guam as provided by section 26 (a) of this act, and shall be entitled to the benefits of retirement provided in section 373 of title 28, United States Code. The Chief Justice of the United States may, with the consent of the judge so assigned, assign any United States circuit or district judge to serve as a judge in the District Court of Guam whenever it is made to appear that such an assignment is necessary for the proper dispatch of the business of the court.

"(b) The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a United States attorney and United States marshal for Guam to whose offices the provisions of chapters 31 and 33 of title 28, United States Code, respectively, shall apply.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands a question? As I understand, this is a bill which gives a civilian form of government to American Guam which has been under a military administration for about 50 years?

Mr. PETERSON. That is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And wherein the President by Executive order last September established a civilian governor, who has been in charge since that date, pending the enactment of this bill?

Mr. PETERSON. That is correct. The amendments are more or less procedural. In other words, as to the governor's salary, the Senate bill is less than the House bill, and it provides for a secretary of Guam instead of a lieutenant governor, and instead of a supreme court it provides for a district court, doing away with two judges. As far as the bill is concerned, the Senate bill is more economical than the House bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree with the gentleman on that. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE OF ESCORT

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as a committee to escort our distinguished guests into the House the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

RECESS

The SPEAKER. The Chair declares the House in recess at this time subject to the call of the Chair.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

RECEPTION OF MEMBERS OF THE JAPANESE DIET

During the recess the following proceedings occurred:

The members of the Japanese Diet entered the Hall of the House of Representatives at 12 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m., and were escorted by the committee appointed for that purpose to the places reserved for them.

The SPEAKER. Members of the House of Representatives, it is my high privilege and great pleasure to welcome on this floor today and in the gallery distinguished citizens from Japan.

To say that they are welcome here in the United States of America and that we are glad to have them is putting it only mildly. We are glad that you are here representing the country you do.

For many, many years peace and amity reigned between the United States and Japan. In recent years that has been disturbed. We trust that your visit here is an evidence that your government is a friendly one. It gives us the opportunity of showing you that in the future we want to be your friends. We want to live in peace with you, that you and we in a democratic way may carry on and make the world in which we live a better place.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to join with our distinguished Speaker in this cordial welcome to our distinguished guests from across the sea. We are living in a turbulent period, a period when all that is dear and precious to mankind is at stake. In these critical days, we are delighted to have this genuine gesture of friendship, and we welcome you to a country which is ready and anxious to establish firmly the bonds of friendship.

The United States at the present moment is trying to aid in the rebuilding and rehabilitation of your native land. We want to make Japan one of the great countries of the world, a country that will join with us and the other forces that will fight for freedom and for better days for peoples everywhere.

It is in this spirit we welcome you here today. We believe the generous gesture of your visit to us will bear good fruit in the days that are to come. We want you to realize that the people of the United States have no desire either for domination of other countries or of empire. We are only trying to build a more peaceful world, a world where we may achieve a better life for the average man and woman, whether they live in the United States, Japan, or any other country.

The people of the world are begging for peace. They seek peace, but at the same time, they want freedom and opportunity. People who believe in peace and freedom must be rallied together in one great common cause.

We hope that this visit will cement better relations between two great peoples, two peoples, who, working in full cooperation, can rescue the world from war and destruction.

I repeat, I am happy to join with our distinguished Speaker and to welcome you to the United States. I hope your visit will be happy and profitable. I am sure that it will help to give you a better understanding of what can come from people who live in freedom, where private initiative has the opportunity to work its wondrous results. We want you to take back to Japan the most kindly feelings toward the people of the United States. I believe the peoples of our two great countries working together can be a positive force—a positive force for better things for all the people of the world.

Let us work together. With full confidence and trust in each other, we can rescue mankind from the threat of those who would put out the lights of freedom and usher in an era of oppression and perhaps slavery.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the spokesman for the members of the Japanese Diet to come to the Speaker's rostrum, that he may be presented.

Delegate Kitamura stood at the Speaker's rostrum, to the right of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair takes great pleasure in presenting to the Members of the House of Representatives a leader of the Democratic Party in the Japanese Diet, Member for Nagasaki, and former Minister of Finance, Delegate Tokutaro Kitamura, representing the members of the Diet of Japan.

Delegate KITAMURA. On behalf of the Japanese delegates who have been permitted to come into this great place, I should like to be allowed to express several things in my reply.

I wish to express our very deepest gratitude for this great honor which has been extended to us, to be permitted to come here, and especially to be permitted to come to this great place of honor here on the stand to express our message of gratitude. This is something which words cannot express.

As a representative of the Japanese people, I should like to express our deepest regret for the tragic trouble that we have caused to the people of the United States, the peoples of the European nations, the people of of China, and also the people of the Australian nation, representatives of whom I believe are in the gallery today. [Applause.]

The third point to which I should like to refer is the very deep gratitude the Japanese people have for the material assistance in the form of food and other aid which has been given to Japan for her rehabilitation after the war. This is a gesture which indicates the great forgiveness which the United States has, and gives to your aid a moral and spiritual significance by which we, the Japanese people, are deeply moved and for which we are deeply grateful. [Applause.]

Unfortunately, a very serious situation has arisen in the Far East in this most historic moment. I wish to express also our very deepest appreciation for the quick and effective action that the United States has taken in line with the action taken by the United Nations to forestall the aggressors against peace, the aggressors that are threatening the freedom, the justice, and the liberty of nations in the Far East and elsewhere in the world.

We realize that the precious blood of the sons of America is now being shed to protect the freedom of the world and the Far East, and if we might be permitted, as Japanese, to bow our heads in deepest and humble gratitude and appreciation for this great sacrifice that the United States is making, it will be indeed an honor and a privilege for us.

Although Japan is not yet a free member of the family of nations, still we, the Japanese people, would like to do everything in our own present power to support the action now being taken to protect the Far East. Following the devastation of the war, Japan is now trying to rehabilitate herself and is doing everything that she possibly can to bring order out of great confusion, a confusion which is typified by the loss of 4,000,000 homes. Every effort that she can possibly put forth is being exerted to bring herself up economically out of the destruction that has taken place in Japan.

We had thought that the first step that we must take was an economic and material rehabilitation in our nation, but we have discovered that the far greater and far more basic rehabilitation is the establishment of a true moral order in the Far East and in our nation. Only on the basis of this moral order can a true economic order be established. [Applause.]

It was with this in mind that many of the leaders representing all phases of life in Japan went to the assembly at Caux, Switzerland, and discovered there that the four basic standards set forth by the program for moral rearmament can be the real basis on which a true rehabilitation and reconstruction can be carried out in our nation. [Applause.]

Especially in view of the great forces of communism that are now penetrating the Far East, we, the Japanese people, feel extremely responsible for finding a true answer to that great ideology, an answer that will be a better ideology, an answer that will give a true constructive basis on which inspired democracy can be established in the Far East. This is the great question and the great subject to which we, the Japanese people, must find the answer and carry it out. [Applause.]

The 80,000,000 citizens of Japan are now trying to work themselves into a truly democratic and truly peaceful nation for readjustment and freedom in the world. To bring this about in a real sense in our nation is the best way in which we can express specifically our deep gratitude to the United States for the assistance she has given us. [Applause.]

In closing I should like once again to express my very deepest gratitude for this great honor and most historic opportunity that has been accorded me to address the Members of the House of Representatives and to express my gratitude to you and to the Speaker of this House. [Applause, the Members rising.]

At 12 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m., the members of the Japanese Diet retired from the Hall of the House of Representatives.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m. the House was called to order by the Speaker.

THIRTY-FIRST REPORT TO CONGRESS ON LEND-LEASE OPERATIONS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 666)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

This is the Thirty-first Report to Congress on Lend-Lease Operations, for the period ending March 31, 1950, furnished in accordance with section 5, subsection (b) of the act of March 11, 1941 (55 Stat. 32; 22 U. S. C., sec. 414 (b)).

The Government of Chile, in February 1950, arranged to pay the entire balance on its lend-lease accounts, thus providing for settlement in full of its lend-lease obligations. Efforts have been continued to complete the negotiation of settlements with the few countries which have not entered into final agreements for lend-lease, and to dispose of various claims, accounts, and other residual problems.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 28, 1950.

SENECA NATION OF INDIANS OF NEW YORK

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 4942) to regulate the collection and disbursement of moneys realized from leases made by the Seneca Nation of Indians of New York, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after "leases", insert ": Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the city of Salamanaca to grant new leases, or to modify, change, or alter existing leases, except with the consent of the Seneca Nation and upon terms agreeable to the Seneca Nation, such consent and such agreement to be obtained from such officer or agency of the Seneca Nation as may be duly authorized by the Seneca Nation to give such consent or arrive at such agreement".

Page 2, after line 3, insert:

"SEC. 2. Nothing in this act shall be construed as waiving the rights or title of the Seneca Nation to the lands referred to in the first section of this act, nor shall such rights or title be abridged except as may be hereafter provided by the United States in full consideration of the rights of the Seneca Nation."

Page 2, line 4, strike out "2" and insert "3."

Page 2, line 9, after "basis.", insert "The council of the Seneca Nation shall keep complete and detailed record of all payments and disbursements from the sum so set aside, and shall make such records available for inspection by members of the Seneca Nation at all reasonable times."

Page 2, line 14, strike out "he" and insert "the treasurer of the Seneca Nation."

Page 2, line 17, after "Act", insert ", and shall transmit a copy of this report to the council of the Seneca Nation and shall make a copy available for inspection by members of the Seneca Nation at all reasonable times."

Page 3, strike out lines 5 to 9, inclusive, and insert:

"SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Interior is directed to give to the State of New York or to any authorized agency thereof or to the proper officials of the several tribes copies of official records required by the State, or by any authorized agency thereof or by the officials of the several tribes, to carry out the purposes of this act or other purposes which, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, are in the interests of the welfare of the Indians of New York State: Provided, That copies as are given to the State of New York or to any authorized agency thereof shall be available for inspection at all reasonable times by duly authorized representatives of such tribes or of the Six Nations of New York."

Page 3, line 10, strike out "6" and insert "7."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. BARTLETT asked and was given permission to address the House for 30 minutes on Friday next, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

PRINTING OF PROCEEDINGS DURING RECESS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings that took place during the recess be made a part of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

IMPORTATION OF DRIED EGGS FROM CHINA

Mr. SCUDDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCUDDER. Mr. Speaker, the State Department is an "Alice in Wonderland" sort of institution inhabited by, among others, our foreign-trade policy makers. In this land of make believe, the fantastic is never unusual or an accident. But, just recently, they have achieved a new high in ridiculousness. At a time when the American people are threatened with a 20-percent increase in their already staggering tax load to pay for heavy governmental expenditures for mobilization—we find these happy policy makers actually giving the Chinese Communists "cut rates" on tariff duties to be paid on products they are dumping on our American market. This is even more fantastic when we realize that, in the view of our Government, the Chinese Communists do not even legally exist.

There have been repeated protests on the importation of dried eggs from Communist China, but the administration refuses to act. The rate of imports has greatly increased since the first of the year, and established an all-time record in the month of May. This at a time when the Department of Agriculture was accumulating nearly 110,000,000 pounds of dried eggs, equivalent to nearly 300,000,000 dozen shell eggs, under a price-support program. In the first 5 months of this year we have imported dried eggs from Communist China equivalent to nearly five and one-fourth million dozen shell eggs.

The duty on dried eggs was set in 1931 at 27 cents a pound following a comprehensive study by the Tariff Commission. In late 1947, the State Department negotiated a new treaty with the Chinese Nationalist Government under the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act in which the duty was reduced to 17 cents a pound on dried eggs. This spring the Chinese Nationalist Government notified our State Department that it was withdrawing from the trade agreement as of May 5, 1950.

We do not now have a trade agreement with either the Chinese Nationalists or the Chinese Reds. In fact, we do not recognize the Communists as a government, but apparently they are nice people to do business with. The State Department contends they can do nothing to stop the imports of these dried eggs. Further, that before they can put the duty back to the old level of 27 cents a pound it is necessary to consult with 58 other nations—none of whom sell us dried eggs. Then the President, by proclamation, may restore the previous cut.

Facing, as we are, extremely critical times, I believe that we should put a stop to this type of muddle-headed thinking. The cleaning up of a few messes—of which the "case of the dried Red eggs" is a typical example—would, I am sure, be greatly appreciated by that "forgotten man," the American taxpayer.

DOMESTIC MINING INDUSTRY

Mr. BARING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARING. Mr. Speaker, I should like to submit a copy of a telegram which I dispatched to Hon. Oscar L. Chapman on Friday of last week, the contents of which are as follows:

Hon. OSCAR L. CHAPMAN,
Secretary, Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C.:

Have just been informed that you have summoned a meeting of the National Minerals Advisory Council scheduled to meet Thursday, August 3, to discuss mineral situation and advise the President of the urgent need for strategic and critical metals and minerals. I heartily approve of this move whereby many errors of the last war may be eliminated. Inasmuch as industry leaders and Members of the Senate and Congress are interested in production of raw materials, would suggest at some point during the advisory committee meeting invitations be extended to myself and other key Members from the Western States to meet with your representatives and members of the National Minerals Advisory Council so that not only the administration will benefit by the advice of these men, but the Members of Congress as well. We are the ones who have to supply the administration with the necessary authority to carry out such plans as may be determined, and we should be fully informed.

WALTER S. BARING,
Congressman from Nevada.

I should like to add that this body here in Congress has repeatedly turned down legislation dealing with our domestic mining industry, and it is my hope that this meeting with the advisory committee, if granted, will help open the eyes of Congress to the urgency of the immediate consideration of our domestic mining industry in relation to national defense.

AMENDMENT OF WAR CLAIMS ACT OF 1948

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3644) to amend the War Claims Act of 1948, as amended.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, which passed the other body unanimously, grants to the War Claims Commission power to subpena witnesses and documents in connection with hearings held by the Commission. The House last Thursday passed on the Consent Calendar the bill H. R. 7802, which deals with the same subject. If my unanimous-consent request is granted, it is my intention to offer an amendment striking everything after the enacting clause in the bill S. 3644 and inserting in lieu thereof the provisions of the bill that passed the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. WOLVERTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and there is no objection to the bill to which the gentleman has just made reference, may I say that the House bill was reported out of our committee unanimously. It is legislation that is highly necessary, and should have the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. CLEMENTE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what is this bill?

Mr. BECKWORTH. This bill simply gives the War Claims Commission the power to subpena certain data with reference to claims of people whose cases it is considering at this time. The House bill was passed the House, and this is merely a substitution of the House bill for the Senate bill.

Mr. CLEMENTE. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the War Claims Act of 1948 (Public Law 896, 80th Cong., approved July 3, 1948), as amended be further amended by redesignating subsection "(d)" thereof as subsection "(g)," and by adding to section 2 three new subsections "(d)," "(e)," and "(f)" to read as follows:

"(d) For the purpose of any hearing or examination under this act, the Commission and those employees designated by the Commission shall have the power to issue subpenas for, and compel the attendance of, witnesses to appear and testify or to appear and produce documents, or both, at any designated place where such hearing, examination, or investigation is being held. The production of a person's documents at any place other than his place of business shall not be required, however, in any case in which, prior to the return date specified in the subpena with respect thereto, such person either has furnished the issuer of the subpena with a copy of such documents (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or has entered into a stipulation with the issuer of the subpena as to the information contained in such documents.

"(e) The Commission may, in case of a failure to comply with any such subpena, employ the aid of any district court, for the district in which such person is found, resides, or transacts business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence. Such court may, in case of a refusal to obey the subpena issued to such person, issue an order requiring that person to appear there to produce records, if so ordered, or to give evidence concerning the matter in question. Any failure to obey such order of the court shall be punishable by such court as a contempt thereof. Witnesses subpenaed under subsection 2 (d) or (e) shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are allowed and paid witnesses in United States district courts.

"(f) The Commission may authorize and empower any of its employees to administer to, or take from, any person an oath, affirmation, or affidavit when such instrument is required in the performance of the functions or activities of the Commission."

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BECKWORTH: Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill S. 3644 and insert the provisions of the bill H. R. 7802 as passed, as follows:

"That section 2 of the War Claims Act of 1948 (Public Law 896, 80th Cong., approved July 3, 1948), as amended, is hereby amended by redesignating subsection '(d)' thereof as subsection '(e)', and by inserting immediately after subsection (c) thereof the following subsection:

"'(d) (1) For the purpose of any hearing, examination, or investigation under this act, the Commission and those employees designated by the Commission shall have the power to issue subpenas requiring persons to appear and testify or to appear and produce documents, or both, at any designated place where such hearing, examination, or investigation is being held. The Commission or any employee so designated shall, upon application of a claimant, issue to such claimant subpenas requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses or the production of documents, or both, required by such claimant in hearings upon his claim: Provided, That the claimant making such application pay the witness fees and mileage of any witness or witnesses subpenaed upon his request. The production of a person's documents at any place other than his place of business shall not be required, however, in any case in which, prior to the return date specified in the subpena with respect thereto, such person either has furnished the issuer of the subpena with a copy of such documents (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or has entered into a stipulation with the issuer of the subpena as to the information contained in such documents.

"'(2) The Commission may, in case of a failure or refusal on the part of any person to comply with any such subpena, invoke the aid of any United States district court within the jurisdiction of which the hearing, examination, or investigation is being conducted, or such person resides or transacts business. Such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear at the designated place of hearing, examination, or investigation, there to give or produce testimony or documentary evidence concerning the matter in question. Any failure to obey such order of the court shall be punishable by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district wherein such person resides or transacts business or wherever such person may be found.

"'(3) Witnesses subpenaed under this subsection (d) shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are allowed and paid witnesses in United States district courts.

"'(4) Any member of the Commission, and any employee of the Commission authorized by the Commission to do so, may administer to, or take from, any person an oath, affirmation, or affidavit when such action is necessary or appropriate in the performance of the functions or activities of the Commission.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The proceedings whereby a similar House bill (H. R. 7802) was passed were vacated, and the bill was laid on the table.

COTTON ACREAGE ALLOTMENTS AND MARKETING QUOTAS

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9109) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended; the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act; Public Law 74, Seventy-seventh Congress; the Agricultural Act of 1949; and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9109, with Mr. ROONEY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on Thursday, July 27, the Clerk had read section 1 of the bill.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITE of California: Strike out all of section 1 and renumber the remaining sections accordingly.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, in view of the importance of this amendment, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to remove from the bill that provision which would make the proclamation of cotton quotas practically certain for the next 2 years. This is the amendment about which many of the Members, especially those from Western States, have received telegrams requesting support of it. While this bill does not make any direct provision for the distribution of cotton acreage between the States, this section 1, which my amendment would eliminate, would have the practical effect of slowing down the movement of cotton acreage from the Southeastern States to the Southwestern and Western States. It will be noted from the population figures released by the Census Bureau recently that the population of California has increased about 50 percent in the last 10 years, and other Western States also increased by a large percentage. Most of those new people in California, Arizona, New Mexico, and west Texas, came from Oklahoma, east Texas, Arkansas, and other Southern and Southeastern States. Many of those people who have moved out West were cotton farmers. But, when they moved, they could not bring their cotton allotments with them because the Federal law provides that the cotton allotment goes to the farm and not to the farmer. As a result, the western cotton States have wound up with a great many cotton farmers whose cotton allotments are still in Oklahoma, Arkansas, or some other cotton-growing States.

The present law provides that cotton quotas are not to be proclaimed by the Secretary of Agriculture when the supply of cotton falls below normal. With the very short cotton crop which is now being produced it now appears certain that the supply of cotton will be below normal at the end of the current crop year, and therefore no quotas will be invoked next year. But now that the cotton supply has reached normal and the West is to be free to plant the cotton it needs to support its people, what have our southern friends done in the pending bill? Why, they are attempting to change the definition of the term "normal supply of cotton" to keep the West, and even their own farmers under restricted cotton plantings when it would not be done under the present law.

In other words, the definition of "normal supply of cotton" was fine until it has given the West a chance to expand its cotton acreage. Now our southern friends want to change it. They want to remove the "plus 30 percent" from the definition of "normal supply," and that is what section 1 of the pending bill would do.

If my amendment prevails so that the present law is left undisturbed, it would mean that some of the Nation's cotton acreage can move to the West to take care of the people who have moved out there.

I remember very well the dozens of Congressmen from the South who appeared before the Committee on Agriculture a few months ago pleading with us to do something about the county to farm allotments on cotton. They told us in effect that many of their cotton farmers were about ready to lynch them because of the gross inequities of the then existing cotton allotment law as it pertained to the distribution of the county allotment to the farms. It will be remembered that the Cooley resolution rectified that situation for this year only. The pending bill would rectify that county to farm allotment situation on a permanent basis. Therefore, I say to you gentlemen from the South that if you leave in the pending bill this section 1 which my amendment would eliminate, you are going to kill this whole bill and bring down on your necks that swarm of hornets which you must have thought you were in a few months ago when we passed the Cooley resolution in an effort to get them off temporarily. I say this because the effect of section 1 of the pending bill would be to make that unfortunate situation almost certain to prevail for the next 2 years by changing the statistics upon which the quota proclamation is based while if my amendment is adopted it would leave the present law on cotton quotas undisturbed and the natural law of supply and demand would be permitted to work thereby allowing these new people in the West to raise some cotton to meet the demands of the wartime economy. There are members of another body in the Congress who are in key positions to kill the bill and who have openly declared that if this section 1, which my amendment would eliminate, remains in this bill, the bill will never become law. I hope you gentlemen from the South will please bear in mind that the influence in a particular committee of another body of Congress has recently shifted because of the recent election in Oklahoma, and therefore, if a certain individual in the other body says section 1 of this bill must come out if it is to become law, then it is a pretty safe bet that it must come out. That makes the issue on my amendment very simple. No amendment, no bill, no bill, no relief for the thousands of your cotton farmer constituents who will be on your neck demanding to know why you did not vote to give them relief from the county to farm-allotment situation about which they complained so vigorously to you a few months ago and which the Cooley resolution relieved for this year only.

The choice is up to you, my friends. For the sake of your constituents and mine I beg you to vote "aye" on my amendment to strike section 1 from this bill. Thank you.

Mr. TAURIELLO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of California. I yield.

Mr. TAURIELLO. Can the gentleman tell me if the Department of Agriculture has recommended this legislation?

Mr. WHITE of California. I cannot answer the gentleman's question. I suggest he refer that to the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I regret that the gentleman from California has seen fit to make this a sectional matter and intimates that someone is trying to take some cotton away from California or, rather, to prevent California from receiving the cotton which it should have. As he states, this amendment that was put in the bill was recommended among others by the Missouri Cotton Producers Association. Missouri, for the benefit of those who may not be acquainted with that section of the State which produces cotton, does produce it in rather large quantities. We have high yields there. We also have a large acreage which is adaptable to the growing of cotton; and if we are to be turned loose again in another race, Missouri can take care of itself, and we can increase in proportion along with any other section of the country.

My support of this bill is brought about because I would say that unless we do give the Secretary authority to proclaim marketing quotas during 1951 and 1952 we are going to bring about a condition that will make the confusion that we had in the latter part of last year and the early part of this one seem very mild.

Unless section 1 remains in the bill, we are going to bring about the abandonment of the PMA organizations with the records that they have, and we would not have any measurement of the crop during that year. We recognized last year that with the acreage turned loose that we could not use 1949 figures as a basis for either allotments or yields or any other statistics in our cotton program. Unless we do grant authority to the Secretary to impose controls during next year, I am afraid we are going to have a recurrence of that situation.

The gentleman speaks about the fact that this bill would not pass the other body unless we took this amendment out and adopted his amendment. I do not feel that the Members of the House care to be intimidated by statements which are made by Members of the other body in an effort to bring about a bill that they would like to have. I think that we want to pass the bill here which we feel will bring about the greatest amount of benefit not only to the people in the cotton-producing sections, but throughout the Nation. I have heard some Members in their conversations say that they were not wanting to pass any cotton bill to help all of the cotton farmers. This bill would not do that alone. I think that this bill as it is written now is not going to bring about any increase in the national cotton acreage; it is not going to cost the Government any more money. We are merely trying to allocate this acreage on a fair and equitable basis and to preserve the program which we have had and which has not cost the taxpayers any money. Fortunately, as has been pointed out many times on the floor, this cotton program has taken care of itself; and although it has taken us a long time to work it out, it has not cost what other programs have.

Let me say in closing that the reason I am opposing the amendment offered by the gentleman from California is the fact that we would, by his amendment, take off all the controls and, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] said here the other day, the race would be on and we would have a duplication of what happened in 1937 when we had some 30,000,000 acres of cotton planted.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, we would have the same situation that occurred in 1937. I do not think any of us, whether we are in the cotton business or any other business, would want to see that happen again.

Under the provisions of this bill as presently written the Secretary of Agriculture, if there is a demand for more cotton, would have authority to allocate or make larger national allotments to take care of all of the cotton that is needed. As I read the bill, it does not impose any limitation on the number of acres that he could allocate, or limit him in setting up marketing quotas to meet any demands we may have.

For the reasons given, this amendment should be defeated.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. WHITE] to strike out section 1.

Mr. Chairman, stripped of its verbiage, the argument of the gentleman from California [Mr. WHITE] on behalf of his amendment to strike out section 1 means that if followed to its logical conclusion, if it has any logical conclusion, the cotton program would be utterly destroyed.

He states that his purpose is to continue the California trend and to provide that cotton may be grown in California instead of in the South and the Southeast. He is rather frank about the matter. He says that he wants to return to the law of supply and demand. There is nothing about supply and demand in section 1, or in the amendment, for under the amendment the remaining sections of the bill continue.

What the gentleman wants to do is absolutely unsound. He wants the Government, the taxpayers of the United States, to continue a reasonable support price with an unlimited production. In order to provide for that unlimited production, not satisfied with the generous treatment accorded the far West including the State of California in the existing law, he now asks that all curbs against production be eliminated, for the next 2 years.

I lay down as fundamental the fact that if we are to repeal existing law for marketing quotas and return to supply and demand we return to 5-cent cotton that we had in the early 1930's. Price supports are dependent upon one thing and one thing alone and that is there must be control of production. Advocating continuation of price supports, the gentleman from California [Mr. WHITE] would destroy that upon which they are based; to wit, marketing quotas. That argument is unsound.

Whether he knows it or not, under the guise of providing for a temporary expansion in California, he is rendering a disservice to the Cotton Belt and to the cotton growers of this country because I repeat and emphasize that there can be no reasonable price supports unless there is authority for marketing quotas.

Authority for quota is one thing. The exercise of that authority is another. But authority is absolutely fundamental if the price-support program is to continue to function.

It must be kept in mind that by eliminating section 1 the other provisions of this bill remain. They are intended to continue the allotments among the States on the basis of 1950 and they are intended to prevent inequities between one country and another and between one farmer and another which obtains by providing amendments that will enable the State committees and that will enable the county committees to adjust these inequities.

Moreover, this bill is important because it extends for 2 years the Soil Conservation Benefits Act that has been greatly beneficial to the farmers of the Nation, including the cotton growers. It expires with the current year. So, I say with respect to the pending amendment under the guise of helping that section of our country that was aided more than any other by taking acreage from Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and other States, and by the use of gadgets giving it to California and other western States, because of the cotton trend there, that a distinct disservice is being rendered to agriculture in general and to the Cotton Belt in particular, because we would destroy at one fell swoop that which is necessary to agriculture, which provides for price supports, and this would allow unlimited production, letting down the bars. That happened in 1949, and we had a production that was almost unprecedented. We had it in 1937 because of the declaring of the Adjustment Act void, and we had a production of 19,000,000 bales, with an unjustifiable and unprecedented surplus.

Cotton growers are interested in a program that is fair to them, to the consumers, and to the public. The most beneficial provision of the program has been reasonable price supports. The Public Treasury, therefore, is to be considered. The Cotton Belt is glad that under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 and under the support of prices with Government loans thus far the Treasury has made on cotton a profit of something like $200,000,000. The cotton growers thus prospered without burdening the Treasury. It is essential for this program to be maintained. The adoption of the pending amendment would strike at the very vitals of that which is fundamental to a sound program. It would provide unlimited production. This can only mean the end of reasonable price supports.

Section 1 contemplates mandatory marketing quotas for the years 1951 and 1952, but under the terms of the pending bill and the existing law, if more cotton is needed, the quotas can be adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture. The allotments among the States will remain, but will be adjusted proportionately up or down with respect to quotas.

There have been injustices and inequities. It is the fault largely of the State and county committees. The fault has been in administration. Among the purposes of the bill is to provide for the elimination of discriminations.

The apportionment among the States will remain. Provision is made, however, for adjustments within the States, within the counties, and among growers. The allotment for 1950 is the basis except in Texas, and there is a clarifying amendment to make that which was intended to be the basis in 1950 the basis for 1951.

Under the terms of the bill, beginning with 1953 allotments will be determined upon the basis of history.

Both dangers and difficulties would arise if there is no authority for marketing quotas in 1951 and 1952. I urge that the amendment be rejected.

Mr. WERDEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes, if necessary, to answer questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WERDEL. Mr. Chairman, I heard the remarks of the gentleman who just preceded me. Again I want to say that anytime that we put a statute on the books of this Legislature or any other Legislature interfering with the free competitive economy of agriculture or business, then we have set up a situation that in itself demands that we be lashed round and round a vicious circle of occasional argument and temporary expediency. Now it is not a question of party politics at all.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WERDEL. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. ALBERT. If the gentleman is opposed to any kind of controls on agriculture, why did he come before the House committee and urge the passage of Public Law 272 last year?

Mr. WERDEL. Well, now, I do not take it that in my remarks so far I have said that I am opposed to controls on agriculture. What I said is that if in the confines of the Committee on Agriculture they conceive a law and put it on the statute books that interferes with the economy of this country, by putting every type of problem into that law that will satisfy the members of the Agriculture Committee year after year, and come out here with a bill, then they have created a situation that of itself demands that we will be lashed round and round a circle of occasional argument and temporary expediency. As long as the basic law is on the books, this Congress and every succeeding Congress is going to be required to consider something equitable by way of amendment to the law on the books.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WERDEL. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. The provision now in the bill provides for the full production of domestic needs, plus estimated export needs.

Mr. WERDEL. Right.

Mr. COOLEY. If that is authorized, before we can have any control, the sum and substance of what the gentleman is advocating is to permit California to grow all the cotton it wants to produce and sell it to the Government.

Mr. WERDEL. No.

Mr. COOLEY. Why should we produce any more than our needs for domestic and export uses?

Mr. WERDEL. With Government support, we should not.

Mr. COOLEY. Then, without Government support, the gentleman knows, and I know that last year's cotton would have been selling for about 8 cents a pound. In 1937 the cotton farmers almost went into bankruptcy because of the 19,000,000-bale crop.

Mr. WERDEL. A year ago in the first session of this Congress we were considering the equities of the cotton-growing areas of this country. The people from the West, the people from those States who created, financed, built, and prepared during a war, in free, competitive enterprise, cotton gins, cotton compresses, and the oil production plants, came here knowing that there was a statute on the books from 1938 that cut them back so that the men working in that industry in their States could not possibly succeed if they were cut back to the point where they were when the act was effective and prior to forced competition in the industry. They came out here, and after consultation in Memphis, agreed to accept a figure that would permit that industry still to exist in those States, believing at the same time that there would be no mandatory controls if the supply did not exceed domestic consumption plus exports plus 30 percent; in other words, with that 30 percent margin there was a possibility for all of this equipment, all of this development, to work in the field of cotton and in the interest not only of the community but of the Nation.

In reviewing the figures of what happened during competitive enterprise during the 5 years preceding 1945 as compared with the 1930 figures of production in 11 Cotton States, there were 7,000,000 acres of cotton that went out of production in those States. They went out of production because they could make more money in something else during those years.

If this amendment is not adopted, the ratio as it now exists between States and set up in the act last year will be projected in future acreage. I say again the war effort demands that we again do what we had to do in the last war effort, produce the most cotton that we can produce on the least amount of acres. In other words, this bill says that so far as this war effort is concerned, for every acre of the 300,000 forced out of production last year in California by virtue of the amended act, for every acre that will grow cotton again in the war effort of 1951 and 1952, we will have to produce 27 acres of what was proved to be marginal land in the last war effort. That is what this language means, that so far as our Nation is concerned, to me the situation demands that it be taken out of H. R. 7309. The statement that this Congress is going to find itself in a condition where it is going to have to consider this subject again next year or 2 years from now is entirely beside the point, because there never will be a year when the equities of this subject will not have to be considered by the Committee on Agriculture and this Congress as long as the basic act is on the books.

I am speaking in the interest of my State, to be sure. I am speaking in the interest of the men who were here this year when this bill was being considered and who went home and then found this language put into a newly drafted bill, and reported out of committee without any notice to them or to me or to anyone else I know of. That bill is now being considered on the floor of this House setting the pattern, if you please, for mandatory controls in cotton for 1951 and 1952—setting the pattern for mandatory controls at all times, not only in cotton but in all the basic agricultural commodities. The pattern is now here. I submit to you if you read the new language which provides that controls are mandatory, whenever the available cotton exceeds domestic consumption plus exports, then you know if we ever have a surplus at any particular time in any particular production year, that there must be controls year after year. So when this bill is passed, there is nothing but mandatory controls for cotton for 2 years and the pattern is here for all of our basic commodities in the future.

Let us keep this in mind, too. When I said the language of this act requires 27 acres of marginal land in the South to be produced in the war effort to one in the States that have proven that they can better produce cotton in the immediate past, there is no discretion in the Secretary of Agriculture in this regard. That is a mandate. I pointed out last Thursday in general debate that some of these States which are supporting this provision had produced only half of the ground and are making three times the money out of the cotton industry that they did in 1930.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, if you get mandatory controls in this legislation I just wonder how many of your farmers in the cotton States are interested in such controls. Are the farmers of the cotton States, as the Secretary of Agriculture states, if they can plant 2 acres or 22 acres of cotton, do they want the Secretary of Agriculture to tell them they can get 20 cents per pound or are they willing to take 30 cents per pound if they can get that price for cotton? Your interest is in subsidies and controls.

I sometimes think you have these controls to the point where the people in this country are subject only to the rules and regulations laid down by the Secretary of Agriculture. I have been thinking this morning also of the fact that we are in a war and sometimes I wonder whether we know just where we are going, and what the next step is in the process of winning this war.

I remember during the last World War you built two great pipelines, the Big Inch and the Little Inch, to furnish oil from the Texas oil fields, and bring it up into the State of Pennsylvania and the eastern seaboard in order that we might get gasoline and oil to produce the things that were necessary and also to be able to run your automobiles. The Government, at great expense, built those two big pipelines. After the war they had no further use for them because they found they could get oil from the Texas fields by boat cheaper than they could get it through these oil lines. Then the War Assets Administration sold the Big Inch and the Little Inch to the Texas Eastern Transmission Corp. They made a contract that if at any time an emergency existed the Secretary of War could take back these Big Inch lines under certain conditions, if they met those conditions. They had a 20-year recapture clause whereby they could take them over for a 5-year period with two renewals, or take it for a second 5-year period. It requires a study to be made of these contracts in order that the Secretary of War, if he wishes to take these lines over in case of emergency at any time, there is a 90-day clause whereby it is necessary for them to have proper information in order to do that. It seems to me that since the President of the United States has started us into this third world war, we ought to refer this matter to the proper committee of the House in order that the 90-day period would not have to delay the process in case of an emergency.

I hope that the proper committee of the Government will make a study of the capture clause that there is in this Big Inch and Little Inch line contract, and then, if the Secretary of War finds it is expedient to do so, he may take over those lines. That is the principal reason I wanted to get this before the House now, so that that study might begin, and time will not have to be wasted in case of dire need.

Now, let us get back to this cotton and peanut regulation. I do not know who is to gain by this regulation except the southern cotton farmers, at the expense of the American taxpayers. If you will look at your financial statement and find out that you went into the red about three and a half billon last year and that you will go into the red many billions more this year, and talk about prosecuting the war successfully, I wonder how far you can go by creating a deficit each and every year and getting this country into greater financial difficulties, so that eventually we may find ourselves in such financial difficulty that we will go bankrupt. You are headed for it sure as the world. Be American—be wise and economize.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] has expired.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. COOLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a unanimous-consent request, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes, 5 minutes to be reserved to the committee to be used by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, in view of the emergency which faces our country at this time, I feel it is incumbent upon me to state that it is the duty of this Congress now to enact legislation to meet the crisis which confronts us.

I believe we should do the following:

First. Restore regulation W to the Government to limit consumer credit and installment buying. It is my understanding that consumer credit buying has reached the astounding total of $19,000,000,000 at the present time.

Second. Enact tax legislation to carry on the full cost of the conflict in Korea, and to insure our own national security.

Third. Enact legislation to tax all profits over and above ordinary peacetime profits on all industries engaged in the war effort. This will take the profits out of war and insure more funds to pay for the cost of the conflict and help to balance the budget.

Fourth. Prices on all commodities should be rolled back to June 25, the day before the Korean conflict started.

Fifth. Nonessential Government expenditures must be reduced.

It is up to this Congress, Mr. Chairman, to do something about high prices, hoarding, and irresponsible profiteering. These practices are dangerous to our own security; they hinder our war effort; they create undue burdens on our economy and lead to inflation. They are unpatriotic and dangerous, and they fall hardest on the people who can least afford to pay the ultimate costs.

There is no economic basis for price rises, hoarding, and war profiteering. The Bureau of Labor Statistics has stated that prices have risen 10 percent in its index of 28 key commodities since June 25. These include such articles as rubber, tin, wool, wheat, copper, zinc, lead, bread, cotton, and so forth. Cotton has jumped 5 or 6 cents a pound; and woolen and worsted fabrics have increased from 12½ to 17½ cents a yard for men's and women's clothing; coffee from 4 cents to 5 cents a pound; cotton has increased 4 to 5 cents per yard; wool has increased 5 cents a pound; wheat is up 2¾ cents per bushel; lard is up 60 cents a hundred; rubber is up 17 percent; print cloth is up 15 percent; and bread, as a personal illustration, is in certain sections of the State of Montana, up 3 cents a loaf. In the past month the price of hogs has risen 20 percent, resin 14 percent, cocoa 13 percent, coffee 12 percent, tin 10 percent, and pepper 18 percent. These figures which I have compiled over the week end are out of date already, but they do give us a picture of what has happened in just 1 month and should serve as a warning of what will happen if we do not take remedial action now.

All the estimates of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics indicates that there is no shortage of foodstuffs in this country. Food production today is about the same as it was in 1949. Stocks of food are substantial; average consumption is high; meat will be as plentiful as last year; wheat and corn will be plentiful, and fruits are abundant. Profits are at a record high, as the following figures which I will insert at this point will show, when we go back into the House:

	First 6 months of—
	1949	1950
Republic Steel	$24, 500, 000	$37, 700, 000
General Electric	46, 500, 000	77, 400, 000
United Fruit	24, 200, 000	34, 200, 000
Atlantic Refining Co	12, 500, 000	17, 600, 000
Johns-Manville	5, 700, 000	10, 100, 000
Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass	9, 100, 000	15, 000, 000
Admiral Television	3, 100, 000	8, 500, 000

The above figures, and they represent only a few of the many corporations whose profits have increased tremendously, speak for themselves.

President Truman has acted with speed and courage to provide the increased military needs of the times. He has offered an anti-inflationary program which I do not think goes far enough. While wages have not gone up, as yet they are bound to unless prices are controlled. The cost of our military program plus the additional expenditures which will be needed for our increased program will amount to approximately $30,000,000,000 this fiscal year. This means an increase of $15,000,000,000 over the present military budget and an increase of the total budget by one-third; $60,000,000,000 will be needed this year compared with the present $45,000,000,000 for fiscal year 1951.

If we are courageous enough to tax ourselves sufficiently to meet our needs the less it will be necessary to set up controls, because taxation, if gone into honestly and deeply enough will make controls unnecessary. If prices continue to rise, it will be hard to bring them down; and the longer this situation continues, the more difficult it will be to find a solution. Voluntary controls and appeals to patriotism will in themselves not work; they have never stopped inflation before; there is no reason to believe they will now. This is no ordinary political year; we cannot continue either business or politics as usual. The American people are awake to the dangers of the times and they are looking to us for leadership.

Our future as a free nation may well be at stake. Are we prepared to face up to our responsibilities, pay the costs, and take the consequences?

Mr. Chairman, under unanimous consent, I am inserting at this point in my remarks, copies of letters and telegrams from people in Montana relative to the present price rise and hoarding situation in that State. I am also inserting a short news item from today's Washington News.

HELENA, MONT., July 27, 1950.

Hon. HARRY S. TRUMAN,
President of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR PRESIDENT TRUMAN: The price of bread went up 3 cents overnight in this locality, and an investigation proves that there is no reason for such a pride boost—someone is just taking advantage of the situation.

We, the undersigned, protest this 15-percent raise in bread, and urgently petition your honor to do something about it to stop such sudden inflation of essential items, such as bread, the staff of life.

The reason for this price boost was given in the local newspaper, clipping of which is enclosed, and you can read between the lines that this baker, who declined to be quoted by name, has just a selfish, greedy interest at heart.

Mr. MIKE MANSFIELD,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MANSFIELD: A group of us housewives feel that something should be done about the way many civilians are buying up things they don't need. You can't buy a bed sheet in this town, together with a shortage of other things, even foodstuffs. We know there is no real shortage but there are too many people who don't realize this crisis is a responsibility of every American as well as the boys fighting on the front lines.

We want an all-out effort such as the Baruch plan. We think a full-scale mobilization for this war is necessary. While there is a crisis there should be ceilings on everything, but when it's over, they should be removed. We don't want a socialized economy permanently, but if it's necessary temporarily, we are for it, and we think it's necessary now.

Yours sincerely,
Mrs. DELLA LEE TAYLOR.

MISSOULA, MONT., July 26, 1950.

Hon. MIKE MANSFIELD,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MANSFIELD: My reason for writing you is to see if you can do anything about the increase in price of certain foods. Bread has gone up from 19 to 22 cents a loaf. When I called a bakery about it, I was told that flour had gone up $1.50 per 100 pounds, that lard and milk also had raised. If this were necessary, I would be the last to protest, but from the reports coming from Washington, this is not necessary. Someone is making a big profit and I wish it could be stopped. If you can do anything about this, I am sure many would appreciate it.

I am sincerely glad of the primary election returns and feel sure we shall have you in Congress again. We appreciate your efforts for Montana, and also for the veterans' cause.

Very truly,
Mrs. L. C. GOFORTH.

HELENA, MONT., July 25, 1950.

Hon. MIKE MANSFIELD,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MANSFIELD: This letter is to advise you today the wholesale bakeries in Helena raised their price of bakery goods and the retail merchants followed suit. All bakery goods took a jump, but an example is 1 pound of bread (white) 15 cents raised to 17 cents and 1½ pound was 20 cents and now 23 cents. The wholesalers advised they raised 1 cent per pound so the retailers followed suit by 2 cents or better. I do believe some action is necessary to stop this kind of doing because this is definitely what the President recently asked people not to do. They should realize that this will just bring back price controls and rationing which they all were against, so maybe you might be able to put some good sense into their minds if you can.

Sincerely yours,
W. E. REYNOLDS.

HELENA, MONT., July 27, 1950.

Hon. MIKE MANSFIELD,
Representative of Montana,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Enclosed is an article clipped from our local newspaper which shows just one of the reasons my husband and myself would like to see price control go into effect immediately, and prices, primarily food, revert back to those of about 2 months ago.

Our highest meat bill for 1 month for a family of four in this past year was $20, and that in Christmas month. This month our meat bill is already $26.65 and the month not yet over. This includes a menu of hamburger twice a week and hot dogs once a week. The grocery bill got so out of hand we had the grocer close our books for this month on July 24. Will have to make up for those extra days in the month of August.

So many of the raises seem to revert back to the farmers, which is fine for them, but puts the average white-collar worker on the spot. We need other things as well as food. We may eat to live but don't live just to eat.

Since price control seems to be the only answer, this letter is just to let you know our family is for it.

Sincerely,
Mrs. ANTHONY M. VERZUH.

BREAD PRICE ADVANCES HERE WITH OTHER PRODUCTS ALSO HIGHER

Bread and other bakery products took a sharp advance here today, the 1½-pound loaf that formerly sold for 20 cents jumping to 23 cents on retail counters, grocers reported today. The 1-pound loaf formerly selling for 15 cents will now be 17 cents.

Doughnuts and sweet rolls went up 5 cents each a half dozen. A package of doughnuts now costs 25 cents instead of 20 cents and sweet rolls will retail for 30 cents instead of 25 cents.

A baker, who declined to be quoted by name, said, "we're entitled to a raise."

MISSOULA, MONT., July 25, 1950.

MIKE MANSFIELD,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MIKE: Bread is up 3 cents per loaf (1½ pounds) this morning was 19 cents now 22 cents=15⅘ percent. Looks like the retailer is the first hoarder and forcing the consumer to do likewise. Wheat is not up, flour is not up, labor has not suddenly brought on this condition.

How about this?

Yours truly,
FRANK L. BUSCH, Sr.

MISSOULA, MONT., July 28, 1950.

Representative MIKE MANSFIELD,
Congress of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MANSFIELD: I am writing this letter to express the opinions of myself and my family concerning an important, current issue. That issue is whether or not this country should adopt price control and rationing.

I don't think it can be disputed that we are in one hell of a fight and that if we come out of this Korea thing without many losses and much damage we will be very lucky. I think we should face the fact that we are in a battle for our existence, or are at least entering into the preliminaries of such a battle. All of my remarks are based on that premise. Let us assume that is true, at least for the sake of argument. Then is it not necessary for us to gird ourselves for such a battle? I think one of the most important things the country can do to keep itself in shape for a fight is to keep its economy healthy. This cannot be done if we allow inflation to go unchecked. No one of consequence benefits from inflation—many are hurt—a few profiteers make a profit. I hardly need express these things to you, for you are more aware of them than I am. I will, however, point out one instance, which I believe to be typical of thousands, or millions. My father died 5 years ago. At the time of his death he was adequately insured so that my mother need have no worry concerning her own welfare. But since then the value of the dollar has been reduced to somewhere near half of its value then. My mother is getting on in years. It is too late for her to strike out in a new profession. She is dependent upon that insurance, yet each day it becomes less and less useful to her.

The Korean War and the wars that are likely to ensue will put much worse inflationary pressures on the economy. What will happen to widows, all types of Government workers, white collar employees? And what will happen to labor? These groups can only lose by inflation.

Even assuming that the war of itself will not strain the economy, there are secondary reactions that will strain it. Thousands of merchants all over our country for some reason place the gain of dollars ahead of all other pursuits of life and hence use a situation like we are in today to their own advantage and raise prices on their goods, whether warranted or not, knowing full well that the public will buy, or, rather, knowing full well that the public will hoard. No doubt this is reprehensible on the parts of both merchant and buying public, and it is a voluntary thing. But voluntary measures will not prevent it.

Prices on many items have begun to go up right here in Missoula. In the last few weeks I have seen and heard many ads using the war-scare psychology to stimulate buying. They are heard over the radio and they are seen in the paper. I select one and enclose it as a typical example of what is taking place here.

The value of our dollar has declined far enough. I personally don't want to see it go any further.

Many people believe that rationing and price control mean dictatorship. Perhaps in a certain sense they do. But these are emergency times, and to my way of thinking it is far better to have a regulated control lawfully enacted by a democratic Congress than an unregulated economic havoc.

Well, I think I have made my sentiments and those of my family and friends clear enough to you. I hope you will forgive this long exposition of my thoughts, but I feel very strongly on the subject.

Yours truly,

BRUCE R. TOOLE.

Representative MIKE MANSFIELD,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MANSFIELD: I am an instructor at Montana State University, living in the university's housing project, among many students.

There is one thing that we all have in common, and that is making our incomes meet the rising costs of living, particularly food prices.

Two items, in particular, that we all use to help balance the food budget are bread and hamburger. Two days ago bread went up 3 cents a loaf, and hamburger has increased 12 cents per pound in the past month. Why wait longer for price control?

Yours very truly,

DAVID P. COLE.

We are all for increased taxes. But can't something be done about price increases. Meats and bread already advanced noticeably in last few days.

ETHELYN C. HARRISON.

BUTTE, MONT., July 24, 1950.

Mr. MIKE MANSFIELD,
Representative, Montana State,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MANSFIELD: It is very essential to us that you do not ignore this letter. You have been to Butte, so you know how large our Federal housing project is. It is in behalf of all these folks and little children living in the project that I am writing this letter.

The war scare here is just awful. Sheets and sugar have practically disappeared. One store today was selling sheets at the staggering price of $4.25 each sheet. These sheets are actually worth about $2.79 each.

Bread, coffee, sugar, lard, meat, and cotton goods have gone up as much as 5 to 10 percent in the last week. The crowning point was today when bread and other bakery goods went up in price to the tune of 5 percent.

To us here in the project, these profiteers are helping Russia in their war effort. They are doing (along with the hoarders) exactly what Russia wants them to do.

Hoarding and higher prices go hand-in-hand and something will have to be done. We claim your immediate attention to these matters. It looks to us like price control is needed right now.

We sincerely hope you can do something about this dreadful war scare.

Thanking you for your attention, we remain,

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Everett F. Beacher (two children), Mrs. D. J. Larkin (two children), Mrs. L. McClung (two children), Mrs. A. McCloskey (two children), Mrs. G. Blewett (four children), Mrs. Ted May (four children), Mrs. D. Badovincc (five children), Mrs. F. Resch (three children), Mrs. Vesta Lawney (one child), Henry Gardner (two children), Mrs. Jack Schulte (two children), Mrs. Rance Edden (two children), Mrs. Griffin L. Smith, Mrs. Gene Dufresne, Mrs. Adelia Hackman, Mrs. Mary Delaney (one girl), E. A. Sheehan (four girls), Mrs. Robert Leeson (three children), Mrs. W. V. Lanning (one boy), Mrs. Antonielti (four children), Mrs. William Honka (three girls), Mrs. Charles Hollahan (two girls), Miss Evelyn Sampson, Mrs. Virgil L. Hills (one child), Mrs. Olivia Menard (four children), Sang Howard, Mrs. Sang Howard (one child), Mrs. Dale Kittel (two children), Mrs. Albert Cutler (six children), Mrs. Florence Campbell (two children), Mrs. A. Albright (two children), Mrs. John T. O'Donnell (one child), Mrs. Herbert J. Malone (two children), Mrs. H. L. Edwards (two children).

The signatures on this letter represent about 250 families living in Silver Bow homes, with an average of three children to each family.

Sincerely,

MRS. JACK SHULTE.

GREAT FALLS MILL AND SMELTERMEN'S UNION NO. 16,
Great Falls, Mont., July 12, 1950.

Hon. MIKE MANSFIELD,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MANSFIELD: The members of the Great Falls Mine, Mill, and Smelterworkers are very concerned over the recent increase in the cost of living and what may happen in the future due to the war hysteria caused by the conflict in Korea.

As you probably know, price boosts have already been reported in a wide variety of foodstuffs, especially meats.

They are also worried on what may happen to rent control, especially if this war should expand.

Now, this practice of appealing to businessmen and retailers to hold the line on prices is just another way of fooling the buying public.

Therefore, we believe and recommend to you that you immediately do all in your power to invoke price control over foodstuff and rents, until this conflict is over.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM H. GRAHAM,
Financial Secretary.

MONTANA STATE UNIVERSITY, SCHOOL OF JOURNALISM,
Missoula, July 18, 1950.

Hon. MIKE MANSFIELD,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MIKE: I want to urge that you support the placing of controls on prices, wages, profits, and other elements of the economy. We are definitely in a wartime period and the necessary wartime controls should be imposed. I hope you will urge the President that profiteering and gouging on the pretense of scarcity already have started and we cannot act too soon to protect the ordinary citizen.

Thanks and best regards.

Cordially yours,

JAMES L. C. FORD.

[From the Washington Daily News of July 31, 1950]

MILK GOES UP

Milk went up 1 cent a quart in Indianapolis today, and butter and other dairy products followed suit. Washington's milk price went up a half-cent.

The Royal Typewriter Co.'s standard models will rise about 7 percent tomorrow. A 7 percent boost in the wholesale price of Procter & Gamble's Crisco and household soaps was expected to reach corner markets this week.

Effective tomorrow, the Brown Shoe Co. is raising its prices an average of 15 to 25 cents a pair.

STEAK UP A DIME

Round steak went up an average of about 10 cents a pound across the nation from June 23 to today. But there were wide fluctuations. One Indianapolis shop said its price remained unchanged at 99 cents a pound, while one Cleveland butcher increased the price from 69 cents to $1.09.

Bread was up 1 cent a loaf in most cities, including Washington, and sugar was up one-half to one cent a pound.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MARSHALL].

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Chairman, an agricultural problem would be a very simple one if people were not involved. I wonder if those of us here realize the problem that some of us have in connection with the people. I think if we would fully realize the problem that we have in supporting the people and the types of enterprise they are engaged in that we would be in a better position to deal with the problems.

Mr. Chairman, I dislike to disagree with my good friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. WHITE]. California is not totally dependent upon cotton as far as its economy is concerned. There are many things that may be grown in California. There are many things that we in the House are going to pass in the form of legislation to help develop that western country, and we are going to be glad to do that sort of thing. It will enlarge our taxable base. We are going to be happy to put into effect reclamation projects which will bring into production land that is vitally needed for the welfare of that entire country. We are going to do that, but, at the same time, we do not want to put an unfair burden upon other sections of the country. There are many people whose only possible business or opportunity is the growing of cotton. They are getting an income from cotton because there is a support price on it. That is the only reason for a support price in a free enterprise system. If it were not in effect, certainly the price of cotton would be so low that the folks in California and the other States who want to expand, would not engage in the growing of cotton. That is the whole reason for it.

In Minnesota we have a problem, for example, in connection with dairy production. Dairy production is going away from our area, and being drawn from it unfairly I think to places where consumers are being compelled to pay more for dairy products with the restrictions that are put into effect. That is free enterprise in reverse. I know what this means to our people, I know what it means to the small family sized farms, I know what it means when an industry in which they have been engaged for many years is shifted away from them. If this continues we will have people in our State who are going to have a most difficult time making a living. Why? Because the trade areas are restricted by charging the consumers more in a particular area. That means, as far as they are concerned, that certain unfair competition has been developed. Why? Because of marketing agreements that support prices in those areas that made production profitable by discriminating against areas of more efficient production.

We in Minnesota do not have an allotment system that will keep that sort of thing from happening. So it is going to create a hardship. It is going to create a hardship for these people in areas where they cannot be expected to grow much cotton.

I am opposed to the White amendment for the reason stated.

I am interested in farmer control of any agricultural program. I think a farmer-administered agricultural program is the backbone of our agricultural economy. I wish some of the people in the cotton areas were more inclined to have farm control of their programs. Many of the counties turn over the administration of these programs to so-called executive secretaries, some person who has a brilliant clerical or political mind but who has not the practical conception of farming who can sit in an office and give all the answers to the farmers. In my opinion, the farmer ought to have more to say about his program in a particular area. There would be a better understanding of the whole problem. The people in my area would be much happier over an agricultural program if they could be assured of it being administered by the farmers themselves. We are interested in the welfare of the people all over the country. When one segment of our agricultural society, when one segment of our agricultural economy, goes to pieces, it affects the whole country agriculturally. We cannot afford to have that sort of thing happen. We must have a strong agriculture. The stronger agriculture is in Minnesota, the stronger agriculture will be in the country as a whole. Minnesota is not going to grow a bale of cotton. The stronger the agricultural economy is, whether it be in Georgia, Mississippi, or California, the better off we will be in Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, the committee respectfully urges you to vote down the pending amendment. The purpose of the amendment, if it was adopted, is to make it possible to have no controls whatever on cotton next year. As I told you last Friday, we had that exeperience once when the Supreme Court, in 1936, knocked out the old Triple-A Act, and in 1937 they produced 19,000,000 bales of cotton. If you think your Government can stand that next year, then you might support the amendment, but I think it might endanger the whole price-support program. If we should produce something like 19,000,000 or 20,000,000 bales of cotton it would mean that 8,000,000 or 10,000,000 bales would probably have to go under the loan, which means that the Commodity Credit Corporation would probably have to come back over here and ask authority to loan another billion or two billion, and I think that would be most unfortunate.

Now, I am discouraged sometimes. It seems to me that a trade is a trade. Last year there was a division among the representatives in Congress of the States as to how much cotton each one should have, and as chairman of the subcommittee I went to the cotton growers of all the States. I said, "We are having a controversy. Why do you growers not get together and reach some agreement?" The cotton growers from every cotton-growing State met and they themselves made an agreement as to how this acreage would be distributed, and we put it in the law and it is there now.

The statement was made here just now on behalf of one of the gentlemen from California that during the war they built some gins and some compresses for their cotton production, and now they cannot get the cotton. Well, now, let us see. In 1943, California produced only 291,000 acres of cotton; in 1944 only 303,000, and in 1945, 319,000. You understand, 319,000 is the highest acreage they planted during the war, and they say they built gins and compresses during that period. But, what have we done for California? We told California we were not going to put the general rule on them. The general rule is that every State gets its cotton quota on the basis it planted to cotton in the 4 years, 1945, 1946, 1947, and 1948. That is the way every one of these States took theirs; every one of them. In the case of Arkansas, Arkansas does not favor this amendment. In the case of Missouri, Missouri does not favor this amendment. In the case of those States we said, "You have had a sudden increase lately on cotton, and we will give you special credit for that increase. Instead of putting you on the 4-year rule we will let you use either the last year, 1948, or the 2 years, 1947 and 1948.' Now, if you do not think our committee has done fairly to California, you vote for this amendment.

Here is what we did for California: In 1945 they had only 319,000 acres in cotton; in 1946, 359,000 acres; in 1947, 536,000 acres; and in 1948 they jumped up to 810,000. Now their 4-year average is only 506,000 acres, and then they would be cut from that. But do you know what we gave them this year and what they will have next year? Six hundred and forty-two thousand acres in cotton, which is more cotton than they have grown in any 1 of the 4 years except the last year, 1948. We have given them, if you please, more than three-fourths of the highest year. As I said, their 4-year average would have been 506,000, and under the general rule they probably would have gotten about 450,000, but at their request, agreed upon not only by us but by the cotton representatives of the United States, meeting at my request as chairman of the subcommittee, they deliberated, and they figured it out, and they came back and laid it on the table of the subcommittee, and they said, "Here is the agreement of California, of New Mexico, of Arizona, of Georgia, of Missisippi, of Missouri," and by all the others. "Here is what we have agreed upon, and we ask you to put it into the law." And we put it into the law. They have it this year, they will get it next year, and all of this, it seems to me, gentlemen, amounts to this: I do not want to be unfair to anybody; but if an agreement is an agreement, if they have gotten all this extra cotton this year, shall we now agree that since they have gotten that much are we going to have no controls next year at all so that they can plant more acreage and get more cotton acreage in the years to come? I think it would be unfortunate, to be perfectly frank with you. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. WHITE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WHITE of California) there were—ayes 20, noes 71.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Section 344 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended as follows:

1. Subsection (c) (1) is amended by changing item (A) to read as follows: "the additional acreage added in each State acreage allotment base in 1950 for minimum small farm allotments adjusted upward or downward by the percentage by which the 1951 national acreage allotment is above or below the 1950 national acreage allotment."

2. Subsection (d) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) The national acreage allotment for cotton for 1952 shall be apportioned to States on the basis of (1) the acreage planted to cotton (including the acreage regarded as planted to cotton under Public Law 12, 79th Cong.) during the years 1946, 1947, 1948, and 1950, with adjustments for abnormal weather conditions during such period, plus (2) the additional acreage added in each State acreage allotment base in 1950 for minimum small farm allotments adjusted upward or downward by the percentage by which the 1952 national acreage allotment is above or below the 1950 national acreage allotment."

3. Subsection (e) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) (1) The State acreage allotment for cotton for 1951 shall be apportioned to counties on the basis of the acreage planted to cotton (including, in any State which received its 1950 acreage allotment base under subsection (c) (1) of this section, the acreage regarded as planted to cotton under Public Law 12, 79th Cong.) during the same period of years used for such apportionment for 1950, plus the acreage added in each county in 1950 for minimum small-farm allotments adjusted upward or downward by the percentage by which the 1951 State acreage allotment is above or below the 1950 State acreage allotment: Provided, That the 1951 allotment for any State which received a 1950 State acreage allotment in excess of 3,000,000 acres shall be apportioned to counties on the basis of the acreage planted to cotton (including the acreage regarded as planted to cotton under Public Law 12, 79th Cong.) during the years 1945, 1946, 1947, and 1948: Provided further, That the State committee shall reserve an adequate acreage not exceeding 10 percent of the State acreage allotment which shall be used (A) for adjustments in county allotments for trends in acreage, for abnormal conditions adversely affecting plantings, for incomplete or inaccurate basic county cotton data, and, upon proper showing by the county committee, for inequitable county allotments; and (B) for new farms, small farms, for farms adversely affected by abnormal conditions affecting plantings, and for adjustments by the county committee in other farm acreage allotments in counties in which the 15-percent reserve is insufficient to provide equitable farm allotments.

"(2) The State acreage allotments for cotton for 1952 shall be apportioned to counties on the basis of the acreage planted to cotton (including the acreage regarded as planted to cotton under Public Law 12, 79th Cong.) during the years 1946, 1947, 1948, and 1950, plus the additional acreage added in each county in 1950 for minimum small-farm allotments adjusted upward or downward by the percentage by which the 1952 State acreage allotment is above or below the 1950 State acreage allotment: Provided, That the State committee shall reserve an adequate acreage not exceeding 10 percent of the State acreage allotment which shall be used (A) for adjustments in county allotments for trends in acreage, for abnormal conditions adversely affecting plantings, for incomplete or inaccurate basic county cotton data, and, upon proper showing by the county committee for inequitable county allotments; and (B) for new farms, small farms, for farms adversely affected by abnormal conditions affecting plantings, and for adjustments by the county committee in other farm-acreage allotments in counties in which the 15-percent reserve is insufficient to provide equitable farm allotments.

"(3) The State acreage allotment for cotton for 1953 and subsequent years shall be apportioned to counties on the basis of the acreage planted to cotton (including the acreage regarded as planted to cotton under Public Law 12, 79th Cong.) during the same years as are used in apportioning the national acreage allotment to the States under subsection (b) of this section: Provided, That the State committee shall reserve an adequate acreage not exceeding 10 percent of the State acreage allotment which shall be used (A) for adjustments in county allotments for trends in acreage, for abnormal conditions adversely affecting plantings, for incomplete or inaccurate basic county cotton data, and, upon proper showing by the county committee, for inequitable county allotments; and (B) for new farms, small farms, for farms adversely affected by abnormal conditions affecting plantings, and for adjustments by the county committee in other farm-acreage allotments in counties in which the 15 percent reserve is insufficient to provide equitable farm allotments."

4. Subsection (f) is amended to read as follows:

"(f) (1) The county acreage allotment, less the acreage reserved under paragraph (3) of this subsection, shall be apportioned in 1951 and 1952 to farms on which cotton has been planted (or regarded as planted under Public Law 12, 79th Cong.) in any one of the 3 years immediately preceding the year for which such allotment is determined, on the basis of the acreage allotments established for such farms (without deduction for acreage surrendered in 1950) for the immediately preceding year, with such adjustments as the county committee deems necessary for errors in basic farm data: Provided, That if the allotment base for any farm for the 1951 crop is less than the larger of 65 percent of the average acreage planted to cotton (including the acreage regarded as planted to cottor under Public Law 12, 79th Cong.) on the farm in 1946, 1947, and 1948, or 45 percent of the highest acreage planted to cotton (including the acreage regarded as planted to cotton under Public Law 12, 79th Cong.) on the farm in any one of such 3 years, the county committee, upon application in writing by the owner or operator of the farm within such reasonable period of time as the Secretary may prescribe, shall increase the allotment base for such farm to the larger of such acreage as determined by the county committee upon a proper showing of the facts, but such allotment base shall not be increased by reason of this proviso to an acreage in excess of 40 percent of the acreage on the farm which is tilled annually or in regular rotation, as determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

"(2) The county acreage allotment, less the acreage reserved under paragraph (3) of this subsection, shall be apportioned in 1953 and subsequent years to farms on which cotton has been planted in any one of the 3 years immediately preceding the year for which such allotment is determined, on the basis of the average acreage planted to cotton on the farm in such 3-year period.

"(3) The county committee shall reserve an adequate acreage not exceeding 15 percent of the county allotment which shall be used for (A) making such adjustments in the farm-acreage allotments established under paragraph (1) or (2) as may be necessary to provide allotments which the county committee determines are fair and equitable in relation to land, labor, and equipment available for the production of cotton, crop-rotation practices, and abnormal conditions of production; and (B) establishing allotments for farms on which cotton was not planted (or regarded as planted under Public Law 12, 79th Cong.) during any of the three calendar years immediately preceding the year for which the allotment is made, on the basis of land, labor, and equipment available for the production of cotton and crop-rotation practices: Provided, That not less than 20 percent of the acreage reserved under this subsection shall, to the extent required, be allotted upon such basis as the Secretary deems fair and reasonable to farms, if any, receiving allotments of not exceeding 10 acres under other provisions of this subsection.

"(4) Any part of the acreage allotted to individual farms in any county under the provisions of this subsection which is voluntarily surrendered to the county committee shall be deducted from the allotments to such farms and may be reapportioned, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, to other farms in the same county, including small farms, receiving allotments which the county committee determines are inadequate and not representative in view of the past production of cotton on the farms and to new farms in such county. Any transfer of acreage in 1950 shall not operate to reduce the allotment base for any subsequent year for the farm from which such acreage is transferred, unless cotton was not planted (or regarded as planted under Public Law 12, 79th Cong.) on such farm in 1947, 1948, or 1950. Any part of any farm-acreage allotment may be permanently released in writing to the county committee by the owner and operator of the farm and any acreage so released and not reapportioned by the county committee in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, shall be added to the State reserve under subsection (e) of this section and be available for the purposes specified therein.

"(5) Any unused acreage in the State reserve shall be apportioned to counties on the same basis used in establishing basic county allotments. Any acreage so apportioned and any unused acreage in the county reserve shall be allotted to farms on the basis of the factors specified in paragraph (1) or (2) of subsection (f) of this section.

"(6) No farm-acreage allotment established under the provisions of this section for any year shall exceed an acreage in excess of 45 percent of the acreage on the farm which was tilled annually or in regular rotation, as determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary: Provided, That the county committee may, by the use of the county reserve, increase any farm-acreage allotment up to 50 percent of such acreage: Provided further, That any part of the county acreage allotment not apportioned by reason of the limitation in this paragraph shall be added to the State reserve under subsection (e) of this section and be available for the purposes specified therein."

5. Subsection (g) is amended as follows:

"(g) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section and section 347—

"(1) State, county, and farm-acreage allotments and yields for cotton shall be established in conformity with Public Law 28, Eighty-first Congress;

"(2) for any farm on which the acreage planted to cotton in any year is less than the farm-acreage allotment for such year by not more than the larger of 10 percent of the allotment or 1 acre, an acreage equal to the farm-acreage allotment shall be deemed to be the acreage planted to cotton on such farm, and the additional acreage added to the cotton-acreage history for the farm shall be added to the cotton-acreage history for the county and State;

"(3) the additional acreage planted to cotton pursuant to paragraph (5) of subsection (f) of this section as amended prior to the enactment of this act shall not be taken into account in establishing future State and county allotments;

"(4) for the purposes of computing future county allotments in any State which received a 1950 State acreage allotment in excess of 3,000,000 acres, the 1950 cotton acreage history for the county shall be deemed to be the larger of the 1950 county acreage allotment or the acreage which would have been allotted to the county in 1950 if the State acreage allotment, without deduction for a State reserve, had been apportioned to the counties on the basis of the acreage planted to cotton (including the acreage regarded as planted to cotton under Public Law 12, 79th Cong.) during the years 1945, 1946, 1947, and 1948;

"(5) in any State in which more than one-half of the cotton allotments established for the 1950 crop, for farms on which cotton was planted (or regarded as planted under Public Law 12, 79th Cong.) in 1946, 1947, or 1948, were 5 acres or less, the county committee may, with the approval of the State committee, adjust downward any farm acreage allotment base for the 1951 or 1952 crop so that such farm acreage allotment base shall not be less than the average acreage planted to cotton (including the acreage regarded as planted to cotton under Public Law 12, 79th Cong.) on the farm in 1946, 1947, and 1948."

SEC. 3. Section 347 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"LONG STAPLE COTTON

"SEC. 347. (a) Except as otherwise provided by this section, the provisions of this part shall not apply to extra long staple cotton which is produced from pure-strain varieties of the Barbadense species, or any hybrid thereof, or other similar types of extra long staple cotton designated by the Secretary having characteristics needed for various end uses for which American upland cotton is not suitable, and grown in irrigated cotton-growing regions of the United States designated by the Secretary or other areas designated by the Secretary as suitable for the production of such varieties or types.

"(b) Whenever during any calendar year, not later than October 15, the Secretary determines that the total supply of cotton described in subsection (a) for the marketing year beginning in such calendar year will exceed the normal supply thereof for such marketing year by more than 8 percent, the Secretary shall proclaim such fact and a national marketing quota shall be in effect for the crop of such cotton produced in the next calendar year: Provided, That the Secretary may exempt from such quota any variety or type of such cotton if he determines that the total supply of such variety or type does not exceed the demand therefor, but such exemption shall apply only to such cotton which is produced in irrigated cotton-growing regions of the United States designated by the Secretary or other areas designated by the Secretary as suitable for the production of such varieties or types. The Secretary shall also determine and specify in such proclamation the amount of the national marketing quota in terms of the quantity of cotton described in subsection (a) adequate to make available a normal supply of such cotton, taking into account (1) the estimated carryover at the beginning of the marketing year which begins in the next calendar year, (2) the estimated production during the next calendar year of any varieties or types exempted pursuant to this subsection, and (3) the estimated imports during such marketing year. The national marketing quota for cotton described in subsection (a) for any year shall not be less than the smaller of 30,000 bales or a number of bales equal to 30 percent of the estimated domestic consumption plus exports of such cotton for the marketing year beginning in the calendar year in which such quota is proclaimed, less the estimated production from exempt varieties and types of such cotton to be produced from the crop for which the quota is proclaimed.

"(c) All provisions of this act, except section 342, subsections (c), (e), (1), (h), (k), and (l) of section 344, and the provisions relating to minimum small farm allotments, shall, insofar as applicable, apply to marketing quotas and acreage allotments authorized by this section: Provided, That the applicable penalty rate for such cotton under section 346 shall be 50 percent of the parity price for American-Egyptian cotton as of the date specified therein. The national acreage allotment for 1951 shall be apportioned to the States on the basis of the acreage planted to such cotton in the State during the years 1946, 1947, 1948, and 1950, with adjustments for trends in acreage and for abnormal weather conditions during such period. The State acreage allotment for 1951 shall be apportioned to counties on the same basis as is required for such apportionment in 1952. Farm acreage allotments for 1951 and subsequent years shall be established in accordance with the provisions of subsection (f) of section 344.

"(d) Unless marketing quotas are in effect under subsection (b) of this section, the penalty provisions of section 346 shall not apply to any cotton the staple of which is 1½ inches or more in length.

"(e) The exemptions authorized by subsections (a), (b), and (d) of this section shall not apply unless the cotton is ginned on a roller-type gin."

SEC. 4. The Agricultural Act of 1949 is amended, effective with respect to the 1950 and subsequent crops of cotton, as follows:

1. Add a new subsection (f) at the end of section 101 of such act, reading as follows:

"(f) The provisions of this act relating to price support for cotton shall apply severally to (1) American upland cotton and (2) extra long staple cotton described in section 347 (a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and ginned on a roller-type gin, except that the parity price for American-Egyptian cotton shall be used in determining the support level for all cotton described in such section 347 (a). Disapproval by producers of any quota proclaimed under such section 347 shall place into effect the provisions of section 101 (d) (3) of this act with respect to all extra long staple cotton described in subsection (a) of such section 347, regardless of whether certain types or varieties of such cotton were exempt from the quota."

2. Add, in the last sentence of section 403 of such act, following the words "the standard grade", the words "of American upland cotton" and add a new sentence at the end of section 403 reading as follows: "For extra long staple cotton as defined in section 347 (a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, the standard grade for parity and price support shall be grade No. 2 of 1½-inch staple length."

3. Add a new section 420 to such act, reading as follows:

"SEC. 420. Any price support program in effect on cottonseed or any of its products shall likewise be extended to the same seed and products of the cottons defined under section 347 (a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended."

SEC. 5. Section 407 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 is amended by inserting a colon in lieu of the period at the end of the third sentence and adding the following: "Provided, That the Corporation shall not sell any cotton at less than 5 percent above the current support price for the quality of such cotton, plus an amount each month for carrying charges, computed from January 1 of the calendar year in which the current marketing year begins to the date of sale, equal to the average monthly carrying charges incurred by the Corporation for carrying cotton during the preceding marketing year and interest at the rate currently charged by the Commodity Credit Corporation on cotton loans. The Secretary shall determine and announce within 15 days after the beginning of each marketing year the average monthly carrying charges incurred during the preceding year."

SEC. 6. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the 1951 wheat acreage allotment for any county shall not be reduced below the 1950 allotment for such county by more than 5 percent in excess of the percentage by which the national wheat acreage allotment for the 1951 crop is reduced below the 1950 national acreage allotment. For the purposes of this section, the additional acreage allotted pursuant to Public Law 272, Eighty-first Congress, and in conformity with regulations of the Secretary promulgated thereunder, shall be regarded as a part of the county and national wheat acreage allotments. The allotment for any county shall be increased to the extent required to provide such minimum county allotment and such acreage required shall be in addition to the national acreage allotment proclaimed for the 1951 crop.

SEC. 7. The second sentence of paragraph (2) of Public Law 74, Seventy-seventh Congress, is amended to read as follows: "The rate of the penalty shall be 50 percent of the support price per bushel of the commodity for such marketing year."

SEC. 8. Section 8 (a), as amended, of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, is amended (a) by striking out "January 1, 1951" wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "January 1, 1953", and (b) by striking out "December 31, 1950" and inserting in lieu thereof "December 31, 1952."

SEC. 9. The Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended as follows:

1. Subsection (c) of section 358 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(c) The national acreage allotment for 1951 and for any subsequent year shall be apportioned among the States on the basis of the acreage allotted to each State as its share of the 1950 national acreage allotment established under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended by Public Law 272, Eighty-first Congress: Provided, That the State acreage allotment so established for any State shall not be less than the acreage allotment which would be established if the national acreage allotment were apportioned among the States on the basis of the average acreage harvested for nuts in the State in the 5 years, 1945–49, inclusive: Provided further, That if the Secretary determines that the supply of any type of peanuts will be insufficient to meet the estimated demand for cleaning and shelling purposes at prices at which the Commodity Credit Corporation may sell for such purpose peanuts owned or controlled by it, the State allotments for those States producing such type of peanuts shall be increased to the extent determined by the Secretary to be required to meet such demand, but the allotment for any State may not be increased under this proviso above the 1950 acreage allotment for such State, and such additional acreage shall be apportioned among the farms in such States producing such type of peanuts: Provided further, That the additional acreage required to provide the increases in allotments authorized under the foregoing provisos of this subsection shall be in addition to the national acreage allotment and the production from such acreage shall be in addition to the national marketing quota, but the increase in acreage allotted shall not be considered in the establishment of future National and State acreage allotments and marketing quotas: And provided further, That the national acreage allotment for the crop year 1951 shall not exceed 2,000,000 acres."

2. Add a new subsection (e) at the end of section 358 of such act reading as follows:

"(e) Any part of the acreage allotted to individual farms in any county under the provisions of this section which will not be planted to peanuts and which is voluntarily surrendered to the county committee shall be deducted from the allotments to such farms and may be reapportioned by the county committee to other farms in the same county to the extent necessary to provide such farms with fair and reasonable allotments on the basis of land, labor, equipment, crop rotation practices, and the soil and other physical factors affecting the production of peanuts."

3. Amend subsection (g) of section 359 of such act by striking out after the word "That" where it first appears in the proviso in such section the following words: "for the 1950 crop."

SEC. 10. The provisions of sections 1, 2, 3, and 9 of this act shall become effective with respect to the 1951 cotton and peanut crops and nothing therein shall be deemed to modify or amend existing law relating to acreage allotments and marketing quotas for the 1950 cotton and peanut crops: Provided, That the provisions of section 3 of this act shall be effective for the 1950 crop for the purposes of section 4 of this act. All other provisions of this act shall become effective upon enactment.

Mr. COOLEY (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill be considered as read and that amendments be in order at any point in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section 2?

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COMBS: Amend section (e) (1), (2), and (3) of the bill by adding the following to page 4, line 6, page 5, line 2, and page 5, line 21: "Provided further, That the State committee may set aside not more than 1 percent of the State acreage allotment to be apportioned to counties on the basis of requirements for the county committee to adjust cotton acreage allotments for farms operated by persons who were regularly engaged in the production of cotton as owner-operators, tenant-operators, share-tenants, or members of families so engaged during the 3-year period immediately prior to 1942 on the basis of land, labor, and equipment available for the production of cotton, crop-rotation practices, and the cotton allotments for other similar farms in the community."

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMBS. I yield for a question.

Mr. PACE. Does the gentleman object to confining his amendment to his own State?

Mr. COMBS. I would, of course, have no objection to confining it to my own State. The purpose of my amendment is to meet a situation which perhaps does not exist anywhere else, but I did not want to offer it as a State or sectional amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will accept this amendment. I want to call attention briefly to what it will do, and the situation which it is designed to meet. It does not affect in any way the total cotton acreage provided under this bill. It would not affect in any way any policy contained in the bill. What it does is to give a broader discretion to the State and county committees to make allotments of acreage to meet a peculiar situation which exists in some sections particularly in the eastern part of my own State and in my own congressional district.

I want to explain to you what that situation is. The east Texas region is a region of small farms. The people there have farmed cotton since before the Civil War. In recent years they have been getting away from cotton farming to a more diversified form of agriculture which we are glad to see. But during the war period, beginning in about 1940 or 1941, a large number of the boys from the farms went either into the armed services or the farmers went into the war plants of the region and the cotton acreage was reduced in many counties as much as 75 percent to 90 percent. Since the war the boys have returned from the armed services and from the shipyards and war plants and have been getting married and buying farms and settling down. What has happened is this: One of these soldier boys wants to farm a little cotton. They have to have a cash crop to get started with diversified agriculture. But they cannot get an acre of cotton allotment for the simple reason that they were not engaged in cotton farming in 1946, 1947, 1948, and so on. Then again we will have the situation where tenants have been displaced by reductions in cotton acreages. They have never done anything but farm cotton and the law does not let them have any acreage. This is intended simply to set up an acreage allotment which the county and State committee can use to meet these cases which are deserving and need to be met. Under the present law the situation is too rigid and too restricted.

I hope the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMBS. I yield.

Mr. PACE. Is it the intention of the gentleman's amendment that the 1 percent should come out of the 10 percent of the State reserves or that it shall be in addition to the 10 percent State reserve? That is not made clear by the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. COMBS. I do not care which it comes out of, just as long as we get it, sir.

Mr. PACE. But we need to know.

Mr. COMBS. May I ask the committee this question. Which do you think it should come out of? I want to get this allocable acreage allotment so that it can be used in making these adjustments. That is all I want to do.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMBS. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman of course realizes you have a 10-percent reservation of acreage at the State level.

Mr. COMBS. I understand that.

Mr. COOLEY. And you have a 15 percent reservation at the county level.

Mr. COMBS. Yes, sir; but it has not been used down there to meet this situation.

Mr. COOLEY. It has not been used because the State committees and the county committees have not exercised the discretion which Congress intended that they should exercise in making these adjustments.

Mr. COMBS. I know that that is the chairman's view, and I know that he knows this bill. The committees down there tell me that they are not allowed any leeway. I do not know who is right. But if you put this into the law, it tells them to do so and that is the point I make.

Mr. COOLEY. The law now being considered provides that the reservation shall be made at the State level and at the county level for the purposes enumerated in the law.

Mr. COMBS. Yes, Mr. Chairman, but I want to point out that they still have to go back to 1947 and 1948 on this acreage proposition. It is not mandatory, as I understand.

Mr. BECKWORTH. And it is not in the bill, either.

Mr. COOLEY. If the gentleman will look at the proviso on page 5, line 9, he will note the following language:

Provided, That the State committee shall reserve an adequate acreage not exceeding 10 percent of the State acreage allotment which shall be used—

And so forth.

Mr. COMBS. The point is, Mr. Chairman, that this little region I am talking about of a few counties, including the districts of my colleagues, the gentlemen from Texas [Mr. PATMAN, Mr. PICKETT, and Mr. BECKWORTH], as well as my own district in eastern Texas, have been getting the go-around, and we have been trying for 2 years to get this matter corrected. It has not been done.

I hope as a matter of fairness that this amendment will be adopted. It does not affect the bill in any other way and it will put the needed discretion in the hands of these people to meet the situation.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, if I understand the gentleman's amendment correctly, it is incompatible with the very philosophy of this law and all of the other control programs, for the reason that the gentleman is advocating by his amendment giving special consideration to individuals who have, on former occasions, been engaged in the production of cotton.

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. In just 1 minute; as soon as I finish my sentence. Whereas, under the control program, acreages allotted are allotted on the basis of the history of the farm rather than the history of the farmer, and the acreage is allotted to the owner of the farm rather than to the tenant on the farm.

Mr. COMBS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. Yes.

Mr. COMBS. Let me point out that it does just exactly that with respect to this small group of people. Here is a bunch of ex-soldiers going out buying new farmland and they have to have some cotton acreage and they cannot get it under your bill.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman is entirely wrong. Last year in Texas when you had an opportunity to have reserved 10 percent of the acreage at the State level, my recollection is that they reserved only about 3 percent. This bill provides that the State and the county shall reserve this acreage for the purposes mentioned in the bill.

Mr. COMBS. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. COOLEY. Yes.

Mr. COMBS. I have just finished a tour of my district. I had a little business down there. I talked to those farmers and to those committeemen, and they tell me they cannot do anything. Perhaps under the law they could. I want a measure that they say will do the job.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman did not want it in there any more than the committee wanted it in, because we put the word in there that makes it mandatory, that they shall reserve the acreage.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. BECKWORTH. You say it makes it mandatory that they shall reserve the acreage. Is it not a fact that they may not reserve any percent under it or that only 1 percent or 2 percent will be reserved, depending on what they say is adequate?

Mr. COOLEY. That is right.

Mr. BECKWORTH. That is exactly true.

Mr. COOLEY. Now, let me answer that. People came before our committee and complained that we had left too much authority in the bureaucrats in Washington; that we should decentralize this program and vest it in the committeemen back in the counties and the States. Is the gentleman advocating that we vest this authority here in Washington?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I will tell you what the gentleman is advocating.

Mr. COOLEY. I wish you would.

Mr. BECKWORTH. The gentleman has a county, for example, that had 600 applicants, and we got 400 acres; seven-tenths of an acre each. It threw out 350 people. The gentleman is advocating that the Congress assume the responsibility right here and now, as this amendment would do, in order to prevent that, irrespective of what anybody might say.

Mr. COOLEY. Very well. Then you are advocating, in effect, that we take the authority of this law and vest it in the Capital City of Washington and in the hands of bureaucrats far removed from Texas.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Let the author of the amendment comment on that, because it does not do that.

Mr. COOLEY. I am asking you to answer it.

Mr. BECKWORTH. I have read the amendment, quite a while ago, and in my opinion it does not do that.

Mr. COOLEY. It is exactly what I thought the author of the amendment said.

Mr. COMBS. It puts it in the State and county committees and not in Washington.

Mr. COOLEY. That is exactly where it is in this bill. We direct in this bill that they shall reserve acreage in adequate quantities to take care of the situation.

Mr. COMBS. It has not resulted that way in the past.

Mr. COOLEY. No, it has not, and your trouble is back in Texas. I do not think you should advocate vesting authority in Washington. Do you advocate that?

Mr. COMBS. No, sir. My amendment puts it in Texas, and if your bill already does it the amendment cannot hurt anything.

Mr. COOLEY. Very well. Then, I say further, that it is contrary to the philosophy of this bill, and it would be a desperately bad precedent for us to set. If we are going to provide this acreage to be allotted to tenant farmers who can work on your farm this year and on some other farm next year and move about with the acreage in his own pocket, then we are putting a premium on the tenant who might be induced to move from place to place, even from one county or State to another county or State.

Mr. COMBS. It will give the tenant a little freedom; is that it?

Mr. COOLEY. It will give him too much freedom.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. ABERNETHY. It is entirely possible that the gentleman's amendment would be a limitation on the present law; that is, on this bill.

This bill provides that as much as 10 percent at the State level can be reserved for that purpose, and as much as 15 percent at the county level; whereas, if the gentleman's amendment is adopted it will limit that particular type of farmer to 1 percent.

Mr. COOLEY. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. COMBS. If the gentleman will yield, my amendment does not limit a thing in the bill; it adds something to it.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] asked you a moment ago the question whether it was to be taken from 10 percent or added to the 10 percent; and you asked the committee to answer.

Mr. COMBS. The committee members have been telling us it would be 1 percent of the State allotment.

Mr. COOLEY. It would be taken from the 10 percent. Mr. Chairman, it does not make any difference where it is taken from; in my judgment it would set a bad precedent.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. POAGE. For the information of the committee it could be done under existing law; it would be possible to make these allocations although, admittedly, the power has not been exercised. I will read from existing law, that is, Public Law No. 272, which reads:

> The State committee may reserve not to exceed 10 percent of its State allotment.

Section 3 reads:

> The county committee may reserve not in excess of 15 percent of the county allotment which, in addition to the acreage made available under the proviso in subsection (e) shall be used for establishing allotments of all farms on which cotton was not planted (or recorded as planted under Public Law 12, 79th Cong.) during any of the three calendar years immediately preceding the year for which the allotment is made, on the basis of land, labor, and equipment available for the production of cotton, crop rotation practices, and soil and other physical facilities affecting the production of cotton and making adjustments of the farm acreage allotments established under paragraphs 1 and 2 of this subsection so as to establish allotments which are fair and reasonable in relation to the factors set forth in this paragraph and abnormal conditions of production on such farms.

The law says it can be done. While it is true some of these committees did not use this power, it is perfectly clear they have the power to do it and have had it all along; so it will not hurt anything to have this amendment in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina may proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If I understood the chairman of the committee correctly a while ago, the State may reserve up to 10 percent of the total State allotment for adjustment purposes.

Mr. COOLEY. Between the counties.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then when it gets down to the county, the county authority may reserve up to 15 percent. That is what the bill provides at the present time.

Mr. COOLEY. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman's amendment, as I understand it, makes it mandatory for 1 percent to be dealt with in what manner?

Mr. COMBS. It is to be withheld for allocation to this type of farm tenant.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That would be 1 percent of the total State allotment?

Mr. COMBS. Not exceeding 1 percent of the total State allotment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman intend that to come out of the 10 percent which the bill now carries?

Mr. COMBS. The gentleman will notice that the same proviso is added in three sections of the bill. I do not have the amendment before me. It would depend on how the whole thing was interpreted.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE] points out, the present law states that they may do it, and this bill provides that they shall withhold not less than 10 percent at the State level or 15 percent at the county level.

Mr. COMBS. What my amendment would do would be that the States set aside this acreage for this particular year; whether it is out of the 10 percent or the 15 percent would make no difference.

Mr. COOLEY. Would the gentleman mind answering this question: Is it the purpose of the gentleman's amendment to provide acreage allotment to tenants who have not formerly owned real property on which cotton has been grown?

Mr. COMBS. It applies to the man who goes out and buys a new farm.

Mr. COOLEY. Does it apply to the man who formerly owned his farm and had grown cotton on it but disposed of the farm and has bought another on which cotton has not been grown?

Mr. COMBS. No; he could be taken care of. The man I am interested in taking care of particularly is the soldier who has gone out and bought a new farm.

Mr. COOLEY. If the gentleman is trying to provide this acreage to take care of new growers, then certainly it is not necessary, in view of the fact that both the 10-percent acreage which is to be reserved at the State level and the 15-percent acreage which is reserved at the county level can be used so as to provide allotments for new growers. While no specified part of such reserved acreage is set apart solely for new growers, certainly substantially more than that which would be made available by the gentleman's amendment might be used to accomplish the purpose sought by the amendment which the gentleman has offered. Frankly, I am glad to know that the gentleman has now made it clear that he intends for his amendment to affect only new growers who have acquired land upon which cotton has not formerly been produced. There has always been a new-grower provision in the cotton program. I certainly have no objection to providing adequately for new growers of cotton and other commodities, but I do object to changing the philosophy of these control laws by making the acreage allotments to individuals rather than on the definite factors now contained in these control programs. We cannot make acreage allotments to individuals who do not own farm land. We cannot make individual allotments to certain classes or groups of individuals to the exclusion of other groups or individuals and thereby abandon the fundamental philosophy upon which these programs have been operated. The law as it is now written is perfectly plain. The gentleman's amendment will result in confusion and ambiguity, and should therefore, in my opinion, be defeated.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment in order to clarify the issues here.

Let me say, first, that the State of Texas receives 37 percent of all cotton allotted in the United States. This year that State has 7,600,000 acres allotted to it. Under the bill as drawn the State committee of Texas may reserve 10 percent or 760,000 acres. To do what?

If you will turn to page 3, line 19, you will find that among the uses the State committee shall make of the 760,000 acres is stated in the first line of page 1. It is for new farms. That is what the gentleman from Texas is striking at. He says he wants some acreage allotted to farmers, to people in Texas, who have not planted cotton since 1941.

A new farm under the law now is a farm on which cotton has not been planted in the last 3 years. Therefore, what the gentleman is striking at is this: He wants acreage available for new farmers. Under the bill the State of Texas has the right to reserve 760,000 acres and if it wants to it can use every acre of it to do what the gentleman from Texas proposes to do by his amendment.

But that is not all. Over on page 7, each of his counties may reserve not 10 percent but 15 percent. If a county is allotted 20,000 acres of cotton the county committee can reserve 3,000 acres of it. To do what? They can use every acre of the 3,000 for the new farms that the gentleman is so much concerned about, except the 20 percent set aside for farms under 10 acres.

Mr. Chairman, when we have these acreage controls, when you give to one you must take from somebody else. I do not know who the gentleman from Texas proposes to take it from. I know this, and I want it understood all day long because this question is coming up, coming up and coming up, that under the present bill we are giving to the State of Texas, the State of Missouri, the State of Arkansas, and every other State all of the cotton land they are entitled to. We have not had a single complaint from any State. We are giving them all the land they are entitled to and we are telling the people of Texas, we are telling the people of Arkansas, we are telling the people of Missouri: "Here it is. You take it. You can hold 10 percent at the State level, you can hold back 15 percent at the county level, you can give it to new farms, you can increase the allotment of small farms, you can take care of cases where a man has a big acreage on his farm but only a small cotton allotment; you can use it for certain other adjustments."

They can take it down there at the home level. The gentleman from Texas has now gone one step forward.. His amendment says that a State committee may reserve 1 percent. There is nothing mandatory about it, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD], who used that word. He has not added to the authority, he has not added to what the State committee may do. He says the State committee may reserve 1 percent for new farms which shall be confined, however, to one group of new farms. A man who planted cotton the last time in 1942 cannot get any of it. A man who planted cotton the last time in 1944 cannot get any of it. A man who planted cotton the last time in 1943 cannot get any of it. It is only for those fellows who have not planted any cotton since 1941. He has picked his crowd, he has selected his few, and the gentleman admits it is only adaptable to his district and the district represented by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH]. The State committee now has all of this discretion and much more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, practically every time an effort is made to try to safeguard the rights of a group of people that are being left out, irrespective of the cause—and no one is imputing to somebody the desire to do wrong by somebody—but practically every time an effort is made to safeguard for sure, as this amendment does, their rights, we hear vigorous arguments against such moves. I start with Van Zandt County, previously mentioned, where they have 600 so-called new farmers who applied for acreage, and 400 acres to distribute among the 600. And what is a new farmer? You know, the important thing is not the new farm, but the farmer himself. Why, a man could have grown cotton for 40 years on a given piece of land here, could have a family of five children right in the house, lose his place this very year, go out to another farm that did not have cotton on it in 1946, 1947, and 1948, go to his county committee this past spring and say, "I would like to get a cotton acreage allotment," and he might be told, "Sorry, Mr. Jones, although you farmed cotton for 40 years, you are a new farmer, and we can only give you, as in the case of Van Zandt County, one acre, or seven-tenths of one acre, or some sum, however small perhaps none. That means that he cannot continue farming cotton; his acreage is too small.

If any of you want to look at the RECORD as it actually is, I refer to you to the RECORD of Wednesday, July 26, and I can show you State by State, almost without any exception, where that very same thing that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COMBS], described as having taken place has taken place in other States. Almost without exception it has occurred in every cotton State.

Now, what is significant about this little fellow? It does not help him to say that the fault was with the State committee; it does not help him to say that was the fault of the Department of Agriculture office in Washington; it does not help him to say your county committee did not reserve enough. That does not put a stitch of clothes on his back or a morsel of food in his stomach. As I conceive it, the duty of a Representative here is to try to help those who need help; I have in the RECORD right before me this kind of disparity. It shows in some States the average producer has an allotment of 110 acres, on an average, in a county, whereas in some States you have an allotment of the average producer, on an average, of a little less than 3 acres. Gentlemen, I think that anybody knows that there is too much spread there. We have in our own State—and nobody is blaming anybody, we are simply trying to get it corrected—allotments where the average producer receives an allotment of over 100 acres, whereas in some of the counties the average allotment will run not more than 8 or 10 acres, or perhaps less. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. COMBS], as you all know, has been preeminently fair on all matters that he has worked on. He is a former county agent. He was reared on the farm and he has been close to the farm. He knows what this problem is, and he is trying as best he can to correct it, to bring about that which is justice.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. What does the gentleman recommend that we should do for the people that he speaks for?

Mr. BECKWORTH. The gentleman offered an emendment, although the time for debate was brief in late August a year ago, saying that any genuine cotton farmer recognized by his county committee as being a cotton farmer should be given a minimum of 5 acres of cotton. That is what I recommended a year ago. That is what the gentleman recommended before the subcommittee, and that is what the gentleman favors now.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, if cotton were grown in an area where there was very limited gin capacity and cottonseed oil capacity and cotton compressor capacity your acreage miseries would be less than they are under present conditions. That is why you have this controversy up here at the moment.

As I understand the bill, it eliminates the crop year 1949 as being included in the base period because of course that year you had more acreage, very big acreage, and very big production, probably 60 or 70 percent more than the present estimated crop, so your base period is 1946, 1947, 1948, and 1950 instead of 1949.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. COMBS] has offered this amendment. He says that the State committee may reserve not to exceed 1 percent. There is nothing mandatory in that. That would give Texas about 76,000 acres on the basis of 7,600,000 acres that they might reserve up to 1 percent. Your bill provides here that the State committee shall reserve an adequate acreage not exceeding 10 percent. As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH] said, it might be one-half of 1 percent or it might be 10 percent. There is nothing mandatory in there, as I see it. There is provision in there for adjustments in county allotments for trends in acreage, and for abnormal conditions adversely affecting plantings, and the county committee could reserve allotments up to 15 percent, but it is not mandatory.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of California. The gentleman said there was nothing mandatory about that. I hope he will bear in mind that it is mandatory that an adequate acreage be reserved. That is what the bill says.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is to be determined by the local committee, so it might be 1 percent or 15 percent, based on the showing.

Mr. WHITE of California. Yes; but it is mandatory that it be adequate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The local county committee deals with new farms, small farms, for farms adversely affected by abnormal conditions affecting plantings, and for adjustments by the county committee in other farm-acreage allotments in counties in which the 15-percent reserve is insufficient to provide equitable farm allotments.

I am convinced that this acreage fight will be up every year. Where wheat gets to a point where you have to deal with similar controls you will have your wheat acreage fight between your States. You will have your corn acreage fight between your States. You will have it on every crop except those crops which have an interdependence between the field area and the processing plant. If you had limited cottonseed oil, compressor, and gin capacity, you would not have to deal with this because each gin, each compressor, and so forth, would have its particular acreage around it. The industry would meet together and say, "Gin No. 1, there shall be so much acreage in your community," and that would just settle the issue. Here you have a commodity which is not interdependent on some particular gin, because you have so many gins as related to the reduced capacity that you are now producing. Therefore, you have excess processing equipment. Therefore, the acreage fight must come down to the individual farmers and their Representatives sitting here in Congress. I can sympathize with you. I am not arguing either side. I am just trying to acquaint myself with what you are up against.

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. COMBS. The committee has contended all along that the State and county committees could meet the problem I have in mind, but the committees tell me they cannot. I want to be frank to say that I went to the authorites this time who are administering the law and they helped write this provision and they say it will do the job. That is the reason I want it in the law. It does not change the law in any way.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not think either the State committees or the county committees will ever administer this in anything like an equitable or satisfactory manner to the individual growers involved. I think it is utterly impossible for human beings to do such a thing. Therefore I see no chance of your ever being satisfied.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and amendments thereto close in 7 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the gentleman from Texas, who offered the amendment, whether his amendment provides that the State committee may or must reserve 1 percent for the purposes detailed.

Mr. COMBS. I believe it reads "shall reserve not exceeding 1 percent", if I remember the amendment correctly. I had only one copy of it which is at the Clerk's desk. The gentleman may read the amendment if he wishes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. The gentleman's amendment reads as follows:

Provided, That the State committee may set aside not more than 1 percent.

I appreciate the problem which confronts the gentleman. As a member of the Committee on Agriculture, I want to say that we, too, have been confronted with this problem and the many, many, many other problems that a law of this kind naturally brings about. I think it should be pointed out for the benefit of the gentleman's constituents that the law as it now exists provides that the State committee in Texas can reserve 10 percent or ten times as much as the gentleman's amendment provides.

Mr. COMBS. In my judgment this problem down in Texas is occasioned by the fact that these little farmers, they are little farmers, have had nobody to speak for them. They cannot go down to the central State agency and make a fight for the acreage. They are getting it in the neck because they have had nobody speaking for them. My amendment simply tells the committee to treat them justly and gives them the authority to do it.

Mr. ABERNETHY. No, it does not tell the committee to do it.

Mr. COMBS. Oh, yes, it does.

Mr. ABERNETHY. The gentleman's amendment does not provide that anybody shall speak for them. I read the amendment and I cannot see that it designates anyone to speak for them. It simply limits the discretion which is placed in the State committee by the present law.

Mr. COMBS. I asked those men: What will it require so that you can do the job? And they helped write that.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Who were those men who wrote it?

Mr. COMBS. Never mind. But officials administering the program were consulted.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I think the RECORD ought to show whether any members of the Texas State committee or just who down there wrote this amendment.

Mr. REGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ABERNETHY. I yield.

Mr. REGAN. With reference to the 10-percent provision, we had the experience last year that the State committee did not exercise their prerogatives as provided in the law and they took something less than 3 percent which threw many of our counties out of gear. Some counties got more of an allotment than they needed or used or required, and other counties received much less. It seems to me, as far as the State of Texas is concerned that if we say here that the State committees may reserve an adequate acreage equal to, but not exceeding 10 percent, that we can get the acreage that I would like to get in the right counties down there.

Mr. ABERNETHY. That is what the bill does.

Mr. REGAN. What we are concerned about is to see that the State committee allocates the acreage to certain counties that are entitled to and should be allowed to plant their fair share.

Mr. ABERNETHY. But this bill provides that the State committee shall reserve up to 10 percent and use it to meet the inequities that arise. This bill is a home-rule bill and provides for adequate discretionary powers to meet any emergency or inequity that might arise.

Mr. REGAN. Not that we wish to call attention to the fact that the State of Texas is a big State, but it is; and there seems to be many counties of the State that the State committee has not become acquainted with. But if it says "equal to but not exceeding 10 percent," I believe those counties would be taken care of.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I am just as sympathetic with your problem as any Member in this House. The 27 members of the Committee on Agriculture have been studying this thing for a long, long time.

Mr. REGAN. I thoroughly realize that.

Mr. ABERNETHY. We have called in people from all over the Cotton Belt and from the Department, and in our considered judgment the provisions incorporated in the bill as now before the House are much better than the amendment that is now pending.

Mr. REGAN. The amendment may be entirely correct but what I am concerned with more particularly is in west Texas, where since the war much new land has been put into cultivation, and we thought last year the law would protect and take care of some of those new farms, but when the State committee, not being familiar with west Texas, decided that 3 percent would be the maximum they would use under this 10 percent, we were seriously affected.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY] has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WIER].

Mr. WIER. Mr. Chairman, coming from Minnesota, I am not too conversant with the cotton problem, except insofar as I have heard it discussed on the floor of this House. I have heard a lot about the little fellow during my 2 years in this House, but the thing I want to clarify in my mind, and which prompts me to support the Combs amendment is this fact: that in the State of Minnesota and in the Northern States, where we have other agricultural problems, there has been a great trend in the last few years toward large corporation farms. I am tempted to believe that in many of these county organizations or State organizations it is the larger units that prevail in the allocation of this cotton acreage. It is for that reason that I want to support this amendment.

For instance, in Montana, where the Campbell interests represent the large grain growers, they naturally control the disposition of legislation of this kind. I want to say that the little fellow who has just returned from the service should have an opportunity to eke out an existence, and I think he has a right to an existence and I think he ought to be protected. Up to this moment in the discussion of this farm problem, particularly with reference to cotton, it appears the only way you are going to give that little fellow some protection and the right to existence is a designation by law that he shall have the right of recourse in the production of cotton, rather than let the large group make the designation and have the power of authorization. That is the reason I am going to support the Combs amendment at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COMBS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COMBS) there were—ayes 50, noes 25.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ALBERT: After the word "allotment" where it appears on page 3, line 21, and page 4, line 18, and page 5, line 11, insert the following: "Fifteen percent of the State's 1948 acreage was in excess of 1,000,000 acres and less than half of its 1943 allotment."

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to restore in the pending measure a provision applicable only to Oklahoma in the present law. Under this amendment, the Oklahoma State committee may withhold a 15-percent rather than a 10-percent reserve.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALBERT. I yield.

Mr. PACE. In the interest of time I may say to the gentleman that this provision is in the present act and the committee has no objection to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. ALBERT. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ABERNETHY: Page 11, after line 16, insert a new paragraph reading as follows:

"(6) In apportioning the county allotment among the farms within the county, the Secretary, through the local committees, shall take into consideration different conditions within separate administrative areas within a county if any exist, including types, kinds, and productivity of the soil so as to prevent discrimination among the administrative areas of the county."

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, the present law provides that in its administration the Secretary of Agriculture, in his discretion, may establish administrative areas within the county. There was some question in the committee as to whether or not this discretionary authority should be continued. The committee finally decided to take it out. After further considering the matter I think now it is the sense of the committee that the discretionary authority ought to be restored to the Secretary.

Mr. PACE. The gentleman is correct; it is in the present law. The committee has no objection to continuing it in the law as proposed by this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GATHINGS: Page 9, line 16, after the word "acreage:", insert the following: "Provided further, That if the national acreage allotment is more than 21,000,000 acres, the farm acreage allotment limitations in this paragraph shall be increased by the same percentage that the national acreage allotment is in excess of 21,000,000 acres: And"

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Chairman, subsection (6) of page 9 sets out limitations to the effect that no cotton farmer could plant more than 45 percent of the tilled acreage on his farm. In certain instances this percentage could be raised to 50 percent but such 5 percent additional acreage would come out of the county reserve. This bill was drafted as a reduction program to cut cotton acreage.

Due to the invasion of South Korea the picture has changed. It cannot be determined at this date what acreage would be needed to produce an adequate supply of cotton in 1951. It is probable that a considerable increase over the 1950 national allotment would be asked by the officials of the Government to meet the demands of the preparedness months that lie ahead. Twenty-one million acres was provided as the 1950 national acreage allotment. Should it be necessary in connection with the defense program to go to 22,000,000 acres, 23,000,000 acres or say 25,000,000 acres the proportionate percent increase over the 45 and 50 percent will be the same. This is to make it equitable across the board so that each county will be given the same consideration should the acreage allotment go above the 21,000,000 acres that was allotted in 1950. This amendment would treat all alike and permit the high-factor counties to share in any increase in acreage asked by the Government.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GATHINGS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WHITE of California. So that there will not be any misunderstanding, may I say to the gentleman that I favor his amendment and I hope the other members of the California delegation, and those from the West, will likewise favor it because we have a situation similar to that of the gentleman from Arkansas who proposes this amendment. It would help us as well as him and do justice to all, I may say.

Mr. GATHINGS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GATHINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. JONES of Missouri. May I say to the gentleman that I shall support his amendment. I had a similar amendment I would have offered had he not offered his.

Mr. GATHINGS. I thank the gentleman. This amendment was presented to the Committee on Agriculture this morning and received unanimous approval with the exception of one member who opposed the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the Cotton Subcommittee of the Agricultural Committee held a meeting this morning and felt that in view of the present circumstances they should approve the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas. I want it understood that when I speak I do not represent the committee as a whole. I am merely presenting my own personal views.

I would not want to let this matter pass without calling the attention of the committee to the fact that this amendment does allow an allocation of cotton acreage sufficient in some cases to require the producer to plant cotton after cotton. I for one, and again I express merely my individual views, do not believe we can in good conscience tell the taxpayers of America that we are urging a sound farm program when we authorize allotments that will require a farmer to plant cotton this year and to plant cotton next year on the same land.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. The gentleman will recall that this morning we had the officials of the Department of Agriculture before us and inquired whether or not they favored this provision. They stated it might be necessary in order to get the needs for the defense program filled.

Mr. POAGE. No, I am afraid I do not recall just that, although I do recall that the official said they had no objection to this amendment and that undoubtedly some experiment stations would say that some land was strong enough to justify planting cotton after cotton. I have heard that claim all my life. I have lived in the black lands of Texas practically all of my life and I have heard that that soil would never wear out. That has been the experience in every part of the Cotton Belt. In every part of the Cotton Belt it has been stated that the land would not wear out, but it has worn out. I grant that the gentleman from Arkansas comes from one of the richest sections in the world and it will probably be longer wearing out there than the red hills of Georgia, or the sandy lands of east Texas, but it will wear out nevertheless. Land simply will not stand a continual repetition of planting cotton year after year.

I think that our first duty is to promulgate a program that is sound from the standpoint of soil conservation. To my mind a program cannot be sound that requires a farmer to plant cotton after cotton. For that reason I must object to this amendment, I must therefore oppose it. I recall that in the legislation we passed last spring, Public Law 471, we provided that no one should be allowed to build up his cotton acreage where he would plant cotton after cotton. We put a limitation of 40 percent on the amount that anybody could get under the terms of that bill. This bill has a limitation of 45 percent, which, frankly, was a compromise, and I think a rather fair one. However, in this amendment, we are going too far and, in my opinion, we will see the day when those who put this thing over, if we do put it over, will be upbraided and you will have to answer the charge of depleting the soil resources of America in order to reap quick profits for a limited area of this country. There is not anything involved here except the question of somebody being able to grow more than half their land in cotton.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, certainly there is merit in the policy declared by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. POAGE], and it is the general policy of the committee to recognize proper soil conservation and rotation practices. At the same time, the committee agrees that this amendment should be approved, for this reason: No one knows what the war might bring on. The Secretary may want twenty-five or twenty-six million acres of cotton next year. If that should be his request, he must have producers in a position to produce that much cotton. We therefore think we need to provide against the contingency if the Secretary should ask for substantial increases in cotton acreage, and therefore this amendment should be approved. If it was general language to go on every year, I am quite sure the committee would never have approved it, but the committee does not believe that this could happen for more than 2 or 3 years out of a stretch of 10 or more. Therefore the amendment has the approval of the committee and we request its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GATHINGS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITE of California: Page 11, after line 16, add a new subsection 6 reading as follows:

"Notwithstanding any other provision of law, farms in California entitled to an allotment base of 5 acres of cotton or less shall have such base treated as a minimum allotment."

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, this amendment was agreed to by the Cotton Subcommittee this morning and I should like to ask the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] to confirm that for the benefit of the committee at this time.

Mr. PACE. I will be glad to state that the gentleman from California seems to feel that in the 5-acre or less allotment he has a problem that is peculiar to his State, and the subcommittee does not interpose any objection to the amendment in order that that situation might be met in that State.

Mr. WHITE of California. Before we vote, may I use a little more of my time here to direct a question to the gentleman from Georgia to provide something for the RECORD here. I hold in my hand a newspaper item from my home town, and it refers to the legislation we have under consideration at this time. It says:

Another provision of the proposed legislation would reduce the small farm from 15 acres to 10 acres.

I ask the gentleman from Georgia whether or not that statement is correct.

Mr. PACE. In response to the gentleman may I say there is no such provision in the bill. There is a provision in the bill that provides that for farms of 10 acres or less the county committee must use at least 20 percent of the county reserve for the purpose of building them up toward 10 acres, but all of the other provisions of the bill continue for both the State committee and the county committee. They may make allocations up to any amount within the limits of the reserve for the purpose of increasing the acreage of the small farms and it is lodged in their discretion whether a farm of 20 or 25 or 30 acres shall be regarded as a small farm. The 10-acre provision that the gentleman refers to relates only to the 20-percent reserve.

Mr. WHITE of California. The gentleman feels, I am sure, that this bill is better for the small farmer than is the present legislation because of the fact that these reserve requirements are mandatory whereas before they were permissive; is that not correct?

Mr. PACE. They are mandatory to the extent that the bill directs the county committee to make reservations of an adequate acreage not exceeding the limitation fixed for these purposes.

Mr. WHITE of California. And the gentleman feels that this bill is better for the small farmers than the present law, and for that reason?

Mr. PACE. I believe it is.

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in rising now is to find out what the amendment is. If I understand it correctly, it is to preclude acreage in California from being less than 5 acres. You say there is some peculiar situation existing in California that does not exist in the other States. I should like to know why the State of California should have a favor extended here that is not extended to the other States in the Cotton Belt.

Mr. WHITE of California. I offered this amendment because out in California we have a number of very large cotton farms, as the gentleman knows, and we can afford to take care of the few people who produce 5 acres and less much more easily than other States in the Nation. For instance, take Virginia and North Carolina. Over there most of their farmers have less than 5 acres. If we would put such a provision into effect there, it would wreak havoc among those people who have 6 and 7 acres.

I hope the gentleman will follow us on that. We have given it a lot of thought. The subcommittee has agreed to let us handle the matter in this way on a special basis for California.

Mr. TACKETT. The gentleman's amendment is asking that in California you be given a minimum; that is, the minimum that California could receive would be 5 acres.

Mr. WHITE of California. Yes; but that does not take anything from any other State. I hope the gentleman realizes that. That is merely dividing up the pie in California after it gets there.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TACKETT. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. I assure the gentleman this deals only with the operations of acreage within the State of California, as handled by the State and county committees.

Mr. TACKETT. Suppose you do the same thing for Arkansas. If you do that for Arkansas, it will not apply to anybody except Arkansas. But it could mess up the whole cotton program, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. PACE. Let me get the gentleman straight. As I have tried to state several times, we give the gentleman's State just as we give my own State all the cotton they are entitled to. So far as we are concerned, we then leave it for home administration. We have just adopted the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, who in effect says, "Either I don't think my State committee has any authority or I don't think my State committee will do this, therefore, I ask that this amendment be adopted."

In this case we have general provisions with reference to 5 acres or less. The gentleman from California comes in and says, "Well, that does not fit my picture. I am afraid it will not be handled in this way." So we tell the gentleman, just as we tell the gentleman from Arkansas if he has a peculiar problem in Arkansas, and wants to offer an amendment relating to Arkansas, that we have no objection to that. We look to the gentleman and his associates here as Representatives of the people of Arkansas, because when we give Arkansas its two-million-some-odd-thousand acres it becomes an Arkansas problem. We think that you as their Representatives truly reflect the best interests of the people there.

Mr. TACKETT. I am not going to oppose this amendment since I find that other States will not be affected, but we do have a peculiar situation in Arkansas. It is, just as some of the gentlemen from Texas mentioned a while ago, that we have thousands of little farms in Arkansas that are not allowed any cotton. These farmers were off in the war. They are little fellows. The fellows on the big plantations were exempted. These little fellows came back to find that the plantation owners had not lost any of their cotton allotments. You start off in 1945, 1946 and 1947 with your allotments. Those little fellows out there that went into the Army did not get out until 1945 and did not have the money to go back on the farm. That is a peculiar situation existing all over the United States, and there is nothing we can do about it.

Mr. PACE. But we have vested in the State and county committees of Arkansas special authority to handle that problem.

Mr. TACKETT. We gave it to them at the last session and they were unable to do anything about it.

Mr. PACE. Get yourselves new committees.

Mr. TACKETT. I do not know about that, but there are plenty of cotton-farming veterans down there that I can stand here and name to you, that I know personally, who do not have one speck of cotton. Somebody let them down. I do not know who did it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TACKETT. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Who makes up the local committee?

Mr. TACKETT. I am not going into that. It is a long-drawn-out affair, and we could argue here all day as to what makes up the various State committees.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TACKETT. I yield.

Mr. PACE. The answer is that the committee is elected by the farmers in the gentleman's district.

Mr. TACKETT. Yes; the county committees, but sometimes I am a little doubtful about the method of selecting the State committees.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TACKETT. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Of course if the large-acreage fellows dominate who shall be on the committee, I do not think they are going to cut their acreage.

Mr. TACKETT. You know who dominates.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. WHITE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAHON: Page 3, line 13, beginning on line 13 strike out all of line 13 and following, down to and including the figures "1948," line 19.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, if I may have your attention, I think you will desire to favorably consider the amendment which I have offered. Unlike some of the amendments which have been offered, this is not complicated or difficult of understanding. Anyone can easily understand the amendment which I offer. Let me read it to you again. And if you have a copy of the bill, will you please follow me.

On page 3, line 13, the committee bill reads:

Provided, That the 1951 allotment for any State which received a 1950 State acreage allotment in excess of 3,000,000 acres shall be apportioned to counties—

On a 4-year basis.

That is what the committee recommends and that is what my amendment would strike out. Now do you understand? There is only one State in the Union which has a 3,000,000-acre cotton allotment. Do you understand further that this proposed provision in the law would apply only to one State—Texas. Do you understand that this provision, then, is the Texas bill incorporated in the regular bill which applies to the other 47 States of the Union? I would like to make my position clear. A principle as fundamental as the government itself is involved here. If you vote for that principle of good government and fair play you will, in my judgment, vote for the amendment which I have offered to let Texas proceed like every other State in the Union. That is all that is involved in my amendment.

Under the broad terms of the present law provision is made that some States will operate on a 1-year history basis, some on a 2-year basis and some on a 4-year basis. Under the broad terms of the law the different States find their place in that pattern, and no one can complain. No State is singled out in the existing law for favor or for discrimination. But, gentlemen, Mr. POAGE, my able and good friend, and there can be no better Member of the House, was unhappy with this provision in the existing law because it militated against his portion of the State, and it would appear—though I do not charge it—that the committee turned to my friend, Mr. POAGE, and said, "Write your own ticket for Texas in the pending bill and just so long as it does not affect any other State you may have what you want."

That is what I am complaining about. Texas is receiving different treatment from any other State in the Union. Texas came under the 2-year base period. Arkansas came under the 2-year base. The State of Missouri, farther east, came under the 2-year base. New Mexico came under the 2-year base, and California came under the 2-year base. Some States came under the 4-year base. While I prefer the 2-year base for Texas, I say, let Texas stand on the 1-year, 2-year, or 4-year base as such may result from the broad provisons of existing law, and let Texas ask for nothing more than she is entitled to under the broad principles of the general law applicable to the other States of the Union.

You know, Texas joined the Union in 1845, and I hope my Texas friends will pardon me when I say I do not think we should be so arrogant as to claim that we should have a Texas cotton bill without regard or respect to the other States of the Union. But this proposed provision in the law, which I seek to strike out, this Texas gadget, if I may call it that, actually means a private bill for Texas, Texas being the only State with a 3,000,000-acre allotment. Texas alone among the States would no longer be under the general law.

If the proposal is good in a 3,000,000-acre State, why is it not good in a 1-million-acre State or a 100,000-acre State? I am shocked and amazed that my proud State should be placed in the position of asking for the violation of a principle that is so fundamental to good government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAHON. Let me probe a little further. I think you will see that the Texas bill has no place in a general law, applicable to the other States of the Union. Will anybody rise on this floor and challenge the principle which I have laid down and which I think you would like to support? No. No man will challenge it.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. Let me proceed for just a few moments, and then I will be glad to yield.

Those who will oppose this principle will not dare assert it on the floor. But they will say, "Now, now, Mr. MAHON, did not your district get an allotment this year of more than 2,000,000 acres? Did not your district get more cotton than any State in the Union with the exception of Texas?" Yes. That is true. The district that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH] represents got about 100,000 acres. My district got 2,300,000 acres simply because in many respects it is the greatest cotton-producing area in the world. We got this acreage on the basis of plantings in 1947 and 1948. Other areas would have received allotments of similar amounts had they planted a similar number of acres in 1947–48. Those who by discrimination would seek to take away the west Texas cotton allotment might argue. "Yes, there is a rich man in town. There are more poor people in town, so let us confiscate the belongings of the rich man." Is that the principle to which we have fallen? My district had the biggest cut in acreage this year of any district in the United States, the biggest cut below previous plantings. We were cut perhaps 400,000 acres below what we planted in 1947 and 1948—the biggest cut of any area.

I see the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] on the floor. Should I, with envious and covetous eyes, look at the peanut district, which the gentleman from Georgia represents, and say, "You have a vast peanut acreage. I do not have any peanut acreage. Look at Mr. PACE, is it fair for him to have a large peanut acreage? Let me have some of those acres and level up the program." Shall I look to the lush rice fields of east Texas and say: "I have no rice allotment. Therefore, give an equal rice allotment to our west Texas people." Shall I look to the rich wheat fields of Kansas and say, "The wheat allotment is small in my congressional district, so on the basis of prejudice and ill-founded logic, let us take the wheat from Kansas and Mr. HOPE and put it in the district I represent."

Such an unfair and illogical request on my part would be ridiculous. Yet that is the type of logic which will probably be urged against my amendment. I am not alone in my opposition to the attempt to write a private cotton bill for Texas. Officials of the Production and Marketing Administration in Texas and officials of the Production and Marketing Administration in Washington recognize that the so-called private bill for Texas is indefensible and no official of whom I have heard has recommended the proposed language which I seek to strike out.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman seems to be trying to leave the House under the impression that we have given to the great State of Texas something which the great State of Texas does not deserve, and that we are discriminating in favor of the State of Texas. The gentleman does not want to leave that impression, does he?

Mr. MAHON. I leave the impression that the language which I seek to strike out does not apply to any State in the Union except Texas; therefore, it just applies to Texas. Cut it out and let us rise or fall with the rest of the people of the Nation. Why discriminate?

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman states that he wants Texas to come uniformly under the law, but what he actually means is that his district got a favorable cotton acreage allotment last year and he wants to hold to it next year.

Mr. MAHON. I say, take my acreage away from me if you will, but just let my State operate on a 1-, 2-, or 4-year basis just as any other State or any other district under rules of law applicable to all States. Cut out this obnoxious and vicious language which says that the State of Texas should operate under another principle. If my district must lose acreage, let it lose on the basis of a fair law and not on the basis of discrimination. In justice that is all I could ask.

Mr. COOLEY. All right; but this obnoxious, vicious, and repugnant language actually takes away from the gentleman's district certain acreage that he has received.

Mr. MAHON. It takes away 300,000 acres, three times as much as Mr. BECKWORTH has; and Mr. BECKWORTH is going to get less acreage next year if the pending bill becomes the law.

Mr. COOLEY. While it may take something away from the gentleman's district it gives it to others, does it not?

Mr. MAHON. Unfortunately 11 or 12 districts in Texas will have smaller acreage allotments in 1951 than they had in 1950, if the pending bill becomes the law.

Mr. COOLEY. Whatever it takes away from the gentleman's district it certainly gives to other districts in the State of Texas; is that right?

Mr. MAHON. Yes; in a measure it is given to the rest, it is given to other districts. But there is no justification for devising a provision applicable to only one State in the Union just to take away from counties and cotton farmers that to which they are entitled under the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for four additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAHON. Have we descended to such a low level as to say in this legislation that might makes right? I am only asking that you give us the same treatment under the law of the land that you give every other State.

Mr. COOLEY. Forsooth, the gentleman doth have an interest in this proposition.

Mr. MAHON. I have an interest in it, but the principle is greater than GEORGE MAHON or HAROLD COOLEY; it is as great as the principle involved in our great democracy itself.

Mr. COOLEY. Our committee meets in wide-open sessions; there is certainly no logrolling there. The gentleman, I am sure, knows that the great State of Texas is well represented on that committee with two distinguished Members of the Texas delegation sitting on the committee. Would the gentleman be willing for the great State of Texas to settle its own problems by a majority vote on this matter?

Mr. MAHON. If the gentleman wants to suggest any such change in our form of government as that, then let him go right over to the Library of Congress and destroy the original of the Constitution which reposes there.

Mr. COOLEY. Would the gentleman leave it up to his delegation?

Mr. MAHON. Is it proper to say: "Now, now, we have the advantage of you; we are going to kick over all principles of proper legislative procedure and take away your cotton acreage." It is amazing that such an attempt should be made.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman not heckle me?

Mr. COOLEY. I am not trying to heckle the gentleman. The gentleman says Texas was treated differently.

Mr. MAHON. I am not yielding. I know when you point out a weakness in a man's position he tries to defend himself. I think I have pointed out the indefensible position which the committee takes. Of course, I know the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] under ordinary circumstances would not dream of supporting the language which I seek to strike out.

Again, I renew my appeal that my amendment be adopted and that the special discriminatory language on page 3 which applies only to Texas be stricken from the bill.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. Not at this time.

Mr. POAGE. Does the gentleman want an answer or is he simply making a speech for the RECORD?

Mr. MAHON. I am making a speech for the House. The gentleman can get time in his own right if he wishes to speak, and he will no doubt wish to do so. The simple proposition is that Texas should be on the same basis as all other States, taking her chance under the broad terms of the general law of being on the 1-, 2-, or 4-year basis.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment and I ask unanmous consent to speak for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, there is an issue here that certainly I do not desire to have any part in. It is a Texas issue. But I regret the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON] finds it necessary to be critical of the House Committee on Agriculture. The gentleman knows that his district received about 350,000 acres of cotton this year that the committee had not intended.

I want to say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON] that his State is well represented on the Committee on Agriculture. It is a matter of keen regret to me that he finds it necessary to come here and indirectly attack the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE].

I want to say further that I regret the gentleman made the statement a moment ago against the whole committee, that it had thrown fair play out of the window. For the purpose of the RECORD, and in order to make this a Texas matter, I am going to make the unusual request that every Member of the House, when this amendment comes to a vote, except the Texas delegation keep their seats and let the Texas Members vote on it. Whatever the Texas delegation does it will be the pleasure of this committee to go along with. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE] has done wrong, let us see whether or not his action is in accord with the overwhelming majority of the Texas delegation.

I am going to keep my seat, and I am going to let you gentleman from Texas settle this question.

What is the situation? The gentleman has a congressional district that has lots of cotton. There are 21 congressional districts in Texas; it is a great State. This year, and I think everybody needs to understand this, leaving out the State of Texas, the congressional district represented by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON] received more cotton acreage than any State in the Union. May I repeat that? Outside of the State of Texas the congressional district served by the gentleman from Texas received more acreage than any other State in the Union, including the State of Mississippi and the State of Arkansas.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. So what?

Mr. PACE. Well, I am going to explain the situation that arose.

Mr. MAHON. Do not other States rank above me in peanuts and in other crops? We always had the largest amount.

Mr. PACE. As I said before, I am going to get out of this fight but I think the House is entitled to know the facts. As I stated earlier in the afternoon, we asked the representatives of all cotton growers of the United States to get together and try to settle this division of how much cotton acreage each State would get. They got together. Texas was represented; my State, Arkansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, and all the others. They reached an agreement to take care of three or four States, mainly in the West, California, Arizona, New Mexico, and Arkansas. We were assured at the time that Texas would not come under what was known as the California gadget; that is, our committee was. After the bill had been prepared and the figures were run up, Texas did not come under that gadget. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON] had nothing to do with this. I know he did not, and I want in make that crystal clear. But, somebody changed the figures of the State of Texas and brought that State under the California gadget. By doing that they shifted acreage throughout the State of Texas to one or two other areas. It was contrary to the intent of the committee and through that manipulation, with which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON] had nothing to do and did not even know about until after it happened, the gentleman's district received about 350,000 acres of cotton land in the high plains of Texas which the committee intended should have gone to the other cotton farmers of Texas. In addition, the law provides for credits for war crops, for which the State of Texas was entitled to 1,400,000 acres. By throwing Texas under the California gadget, it meant that the farmer who had earned credits for war crops did not receive cotton acreage for it, but other farmers who did not earn it, did receive it, which I think was most unjustifiable.

That is all I intend to say on this question. I had not intended to say a word, but after the gentleman criticized the committee, I felt called upon to make this statement.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. Any statement made by the gentleman from Texas charging the committee with unfairness was not intended. I did mean to say that the provision was unfair, in my judgment. Let me say further that I conferred with the officials of PMA in Washington and Texas, and they told me that they told the committee they did not claim that Texas would be under the gadget principle, and if the gentleman would have anything in writing here showing it would be under the 2- or 4-year basis, it would be interesting. Missouri, Arkansas, Arizona, and California came under the 2-year program. Why change the law and say that Texas shall not have the privilege? Can the gentleman defend that? How can you change the law for just one State?

Mr. PACE. The pending bill merely declares the law as originally intended by the committee in the law passed last year.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas be permitted to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas.

There was no objection.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I believe the gentleman from Georgia has expressed the situation better than most of us could. Certainly he has explained it far better than I might. The gentleman from Georgia cannot be charged with having a personal interest in this matter. Of course, every one of us from the State of Texas will either gain or lose depending upon the formula that is adopted in the State of Texas.

There was a formula placed in effect in my State this year that had the effect of transferring approximately half a million acres of cotton from the older growing sections of the State, largely to one district in the western section of our State. There are four congressional districts involved, but most of this acreage—more than 355,000 acres out of the half million—went to the Nineteenth District of Texas. It is a great district, it is represented by a great Congressman, and it produces a great cotton crop. It is reported that this district alone grew more cotton this past year than any State in the Union outside the State of Texas.

Those counties had a large cotton factor without applying any special gadget. Many of the counties of that district would run well above 40 to 45 percent without applying any special gadget.

Think of that—those of you whose counties got 6 and who got 8 and who got a 10-percent factor. Many of the counties of that district would get 45 percent of their total cultivated land in cotton without applying any special gadget. The gentleman from the nineteenth district of Texas complains bitterly that we should not pass legislation which has special application. Last year this committee did pass legislation with a special application. We passed it because we were convinced that there was a situation in the State of California and possibly in New Mexico and Missouri which required special legislation in order to do equity in those States. In an effort to do equity the committee did pass special legislation which applied only to certain areas where certain figures developed.

Now, the gentleman makes a great point of saying: "Can you produce a shred of written evidence? Can you produce a document showing that the Department of Agriculture told you that Texas would not be involved?" No; I do not think we can produce a written instrument. But for 6 months the committee sat there, and day after day in every one of those meetings that we had the representatives of the Department of Agriculture present and I repeat to you, as did the gentleman from Georgia, that it was the definite understanding of the members of the committee that if we adopted this special formula to take care of a situation which we felt might result in inequity in certain States, that it would not apply to the State of Texas. No; this assurance was not in the form of a letter. Nobody asked that it be in the form of a letter. At that time we felt we could rely on the informal assurance of the Department. Time after time we discussed this matter with the representatives of the Department. We talked about it in committee with them, but not one time that I can recall was there ever a suggestion that this formula would apply to the State of Texas. On the contrary I think the gentleman will find that the recollection of every member of that committee is the same as that of the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. PACE], who has just addressed you, and my recollection when we say that we had no intimation from the Department that this special formula could possibly apply to Texas. On the contrary we had every reason to believe that this special formula would not apply to the State of Texas.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield.

Mr. MAHON. Is it not true that you laid down a broad principle of law applicable to all the States and that you did not know whether it would apply to the State of Texas or not? Of course it would seem that perhaps some of the witnesses may have been asked this simple question at some of the numerous hearings: Do you think it will apply to Texas?

It just happened under the broad principle of the law that Texas, to the surprise of the gentleman from Texas, and I have no view to the contrary, came under that provision of the law on the 2-year basis.

Let us go on the 2-year basis under the broad terms of the general law or whatever bracket we come in, insofar as the law may apply to our State. That would seem fair to all concerned.

Mr. POAGE. The gentleman has asked if we did not think maybe the special formula would apply to the State of Texas. The answer is we did not so think, and the Department of Agriculture did not so lead us to think. On the contrary they definitely led us to believe it would not apply to the State of Texas.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I think it should be pointed out that the thing that brought about this shift of 350,000 acres of cotton from the central and east sections of Texas to the west section of Texas was a mere 93 acres of cotton.

Mr. POAGE. That is right.

Mr. ABERNETHY. And that if the State of Texas had planted as much as only 93 acres of cotton less than it did plant, that 350,000 acres would have been distributed in the sections of Texas where they have had the most trouble administering this law.

Mr. POAGE. That is right. It took acreage from the very areas where the factor was already low and took it to counties that already had a very high factor.

Mr. ABERNETHY. And that is in the gentleman's district, in the district of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH], and in the district of the gentleman from Texas, Judge COMBS, and others who have had trouble with this law in that respect, is that correct?

Mr. POAGE. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield.

Mr. ALBERT. Did it take an extra 10,000 acres to bring Texas under the California gadget?

Mr. POAGE. After the Department had factored away 117,000 acres of 4-year history from Texas it still required a further addition of 9,907 acres additional of 2-year history to bring Texas under the gadget. The Department conveniently found a 10,000-acre error in the Texas figures, going back to 1948, but they did not find it until after we were making the allotments in 1949. They needed 9,907 acres to bring Texas under this gadget and they found 10,000 acres.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of California. I want to say to the California delegation, as well as to the Arizona, New Mexico, and Missouri delegations, that when this matter comes to a vote, if they do not choose to keep their seats, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] recommended, that they do vote with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE], for the reason that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE] was trying to protect those four States, especially California, to give them a fair deal in acreage distribution when we got into this mess, and it was by a mere accident in statistics that we did get into this trouble, and it was never intended. I reiterate, it was never intended in the Committee on Agriculture that Texas should come under the so-called California gadget.

Mr. POAGE. The gentleman from California was a member of the subcommittee. Did he ever get the intimation from any representative of the Department of Agriculture that the State of Texas would be brought under this gadget?

Mr. WHITE of California. Not at any time.

Mr. POAGE. Let me say this further in that connection: The gentleman from the Nineteenth District of Texas has made much of the point that he did not want special legislation. The legislation which placed 355,000 acres of cotton in his district, which he would not otherwise have received this year, was special legislation in every sense of the word. It was special legislation intended to assist in the correction of a situation in California and certain other States, where the committee felt there would otherwise be inequity. I want to make this clear when we gave special legislation to take care of California and the other States, we did it on the showing that an injustice would result if we did not do it. Has there been any showing that any injustice would result in the Nineteenth District of Texas if we apply the same law in Texas that applies in Mississippi, that applies in Georgia, that applies in North Carolina, that applies in Alabama, and across the belt? Has there been any effort on the part of the representative of the Nineteenth District of Texas to show you that it would work unfairly if we applied the general law in the Nineteenth District of Texas? Has he attempted to point out where anybody who was entitled to a cotton allotment would not receive it, in his district, under the general law? He has made a very eloquent plea to apply the general formula. The bill now before us, the provision immediately before us, does nothing in the world except make sure that the State of Texas will fall under the general formula for the distribution of cotton.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. POAGE. I ask the House to place this on the basis that the gentleman from the Ninteenth District of Texas asked for, and to give to all Texas, including the Ninteenth District, and all the 17 districts that were slaughtered by the application of this provision this year—to give to all of them exactly the same formula that applies over the rest of the Nation, except where they do have some special formula. In other words, let us take Texas out from any special gadget.

I want further to call to the attention of the gentleman from the Nineteenth District of Texas, when he charges that we were trying to be unfair to his district, that we have not, in any part of this bill, taken away from him the history that he built up this year. Oh, he drew one-third of a million acres that belonged to 17 other districts of Texas, and he got the money in his pocket for it. He cashed it out and this year he grows a third of a million more acres that belong over in east Texas, north Texas, central Texas, and on the coastal bend. He grows it, he sells it, he puts the money in his pocket. We are not asking that he return these profits. On the contrary, we give him the history he has acquired by reason of growing this excessive acreage. We have no animus against the Ninteenth District; certainly we prove this when we do not ask him to forego the history that he built up with this one-third of a million acres. This bill gives to his district the history that it built up by planting those acres that he found lying on his doorstep, that he knew came from down in central Texas. Oh, he could recognize them; they had our names on them. His district had 118,292 acres from your district, Mr. LYLE; they had 12,999 acres from your district, Mr. BECKWORTH; they had them from all over the great State of Texas, and they could recognize where they came from. They were able to take them in through the operation of the special gadget which he now condemns and says this Congress should not be so little as to engage in special gadgets.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. I just wish to ask the gentleman if as a result of these mysterious calculations in the Department of Agriculture which has the result of throwing Texas under the California gadget, it did not actually deprive Texas of war crop credits which they were justly entitled to?

Mr. POAGE. It absolutely did; and, of course, the gentleman knows that that is at the root of the opposition by certain officials in the Department of Agriculture who have never believed in carrying out the contract that this country made—not the Department, but this Congress made—with growers of war crops. Whether it was a wise contract or not, we promised it; and it is my opinion that we should carry it out. But they say "No;" and the gentleman from the Nineteenth District says with his amendment "No." The man who down in your district, Mr. FISHER, grew war crops under this amendment will be blocked off from claiming that credit and be unable to receive the benefits promised him by this Congress. I do not think that is fair.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield for a question.

Mr. MAHON. My district took a reduction of 400,000 acres, I believe. Is it not true that we got the acres which we did get out of a bill passed by this committee, which the committee said was a good bill a year ago, but which it now seemingly is attempting to repudiate? And is it not true that all I am asking for in my amendment is that you not simply single out Texas for special treatment?

Mr. POAGE. All the gentleman is asking by his amendment is that his district be protected in the advantage it received under this gadget. At the same time he complains that a special gadget used by anyone else is harmful and immoral, but so long as it gives his district 355,000 acres additional then he is willing that we should continue this immoral and unconstitutional special gadget.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from the Twenty-first District.

Mr. FISHER. I will ask the gentleman if it is not true that under the terms of the bill now pending—and I think the House should understand this very clearly—Texas will have exactly the same treatment that the other cotton-producing States will have?

Mr. POAGE. Exactly.

Mr. FISHER. It will have exactly the same treatment as Mississippi, the same as Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, North and South Carolina, and all the other States; is not that correct?

Mr. POAGE. That is right, with the exception of those that come under the California gadget, which is the gadget which gives the gentleman from the Nineteenth District 355,000 acres. It is the gadget which he vigorously applauded this year as being a just and meritorious proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from the Twenty-first District.

Mr. FISHER. I think it is important, as has been pointed out here, that all of these other cotton-producing States are now operating under the Public Law 12 and are guaranteed a credit for war crops grown during the war period. Is not that correct?

Mr. POAGE. That is right.

Mr. FISHER. If this bill is not passed without amendment then we will be deprived of the war-crop allowance which was guaranteed and assured in Public Law 12. Is not that correct?

Mr. POAGE. That is exactly right.

Now, let me summarize this if I may: Last year the Congress in an effort to do justice to California and certain other States passed a special gadget which worked very materially to the advantage of the gentlemen from the Nineteenth District of Texas at the expense of the 17 other districts in Texas.

Regardless of how it came about, and the chairman of the subcommittee has pointed this out, as have other members of the committee who heard all of the evidence, it is the clear opinion of the subcommittee it was done deliberately, but, regardless of how it happened, it did happen. An injustice was done to 17 districts in Texas. We simply ask that next year Texas will not operate under any special gadget but that Texas will be on the same basis in distributing its cotton acreage within the State that all the other States except those that showed there was some reason for giving them a gadget, as is the case with California.

Mr. WERDEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WERDEL. I think the gentleman should point out why in the State of Texas the State committee, by withholding its 10 percent, cannot clear up this problem.

Mr. POAGE. I feel that that was probably pointed out before, but the State of Texas cannot clear up this problem, even by use of the State reserve. The State committee did not use the State reserve, that is true and doubtless aggravated a certain situation. But the basic problem here is that there was a shift of a half million acres from sections in the State that would have received it under the general law to areas that received it simply because of the special gadget; but those areas in Texas that had the special gadget made no effort to show that they had any merit or that there was any reason for receiving the special gadget. The State of California showed they had some reason for it. Not so in the Nineteenth District of Texas. It was simply a windfall that fell on their doorstep or their broad plains. Again I call attention to the fact there was no malice on the part of the committee, that we are leaving the Nineteenth District, and I want to make this plain, with a third of a million acres of production this year for which they are getting cash. We are leaving them with a third of a million acres of history which will go on and on as long as they grow cotton. Yet the gentleman from the Nineteenth District says we have animus against his district, that we are prejudiced against it.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. Is it not a fact that when the law was written in 1949 it was clearly understood that Texas would not come under the California gadget?

Mr. POAGE. It was so understood, and every member of the subcommittee I have heard express himself points out that that was the understanding with the Department of Agriculture.

I want to call attention to the fact that not only was that understood but the gentleman from the Nineteenth District does not claim he had any other understanding. He simply found it lying on his doorstep. Of course, he used it. I do not blame him, and we are charging him no rent for the use; we are not trying to penalize him; but we are saying that because they had a special gadget out in the Nineteenth District in 1950 it does not entitled them to perpetually take advantage of this.

Mr. BRAMBLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BRAMBLETT. I want to reiterate the fact that as a member of the committee it was my understanding that Texas did not come under the gadget.

Mr. POAGE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. I am absolutely astounded and amazed that somebody did not ask the witnesses when they were before the committee, or ask the Department if Texas was under the 2-year gadget. What you did was to write an over-all bill that applied to all States. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GATHINGS] did not know for sure that his State would be under the 2-year base program.

Mr. POAGE. May I say to the gentleman from the Nineteenth District of Texas that of course we did not suppose the representatives of the Department would run out on what they had told us informally. We had a lot more confidence in them then than we have now. We thought at that time we could rely upon what they were telling us.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this measure very likely would not be before you today except that the Department of Agriculture succumbed as so many of the executive branches have throughout the years to the desire to not only administer but to also write the laws of the land. Therefore, the integrity of our system of government is somewhat at stake, for we must impress upon the executive branch the necessity for them to stay in their field of administration and permit us to write the laws.

It seems at times that they misunderstand the word "executive" and take it to mean that they should execute the laws that Congress passes and that is what happened to Public Law 272. The Department of Agriculture executed it by misinterpretation.

Cotton is important to the Nation, but it is vital to areas such as I represent.

Homes depend upon it for existence and children depend upon it for their food.

Although the impression may have been left that this is a battle for advantage for one section or another in Texas, that is not true. The question is whether or not this Congress should write legislation which will fairly and equitably distribute cotton acreage allotments in the State of Texas and not leave them subject to the whims of the Department of Agriculture.

I do not seek advantage over my neighbors, but I do ask that my district be treated as the law directs and has directed for a number of years.

Our Committee on Agriculture has attempted to write this legislation in such a manner as to accomplish equity and I ask you to follow the committee in this bill.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENTSEN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman's district got about 82,000 acres more under the California gadget than it would otherwise have received.

Mr. BENTSEN. That is quite correct.

Mr. COOLEY. Of course the gentleman wants to keep that 82,000 acres.

Mr. BENTSEN. Absolutely.

Mr. COOLEY. I do not suppose we could find fault with the gentleman individually on that issue, but actually the State of Texas will not lose any acreage as a State if we pass the bill now before us; is that not true?

Mr. BENTSEN. It is my understanding that the districts of Texas will lose acreage by the passage of this bill from what they received in their 1950 quota after Public Law 471 was enacted.

Mr. COOLEY. No; all States will be treated alike at the State level. My question is, when the State of Texas receives its State allotment it will be fair and equitable among the other States of the Nation. Texas does not stand to lose one acre by what we are trying to do here.

Mr. BENTSEN. I do not know that I would say that.

Mr. COOLEY. We are attempting to bring about a redistribution of the acreage within the State of Texas.

Mr. BENTSEN. That is exactly right. That is the point I was going to make. I believe it is more fair that you put the cotton quota where the cotton is planted; that you not go back as far in history as you can go to try to see what they were planting in 1945 and 1946. I think you should put this cotton where it is being planted and where you can encourage its being efficiently grown, as in the vast reaches of west and south Texas. It would be economically unfeasible if you tried to protect the areas of high-cost cotton production, areas that evidently want to go out of the cotton-production business, and penalize those who are increasing their production.

Mr. Chairman, we have before us today a bill having a provision which for Texas alone changes the apportionment of the cotton acreage for 1951 from what it was for 1950. The provision, in my opinion, is a most inequitable one. The Agriculture Committee has agreed to a piece of legislation for Texas that penalizes progress and efficient production of this major commodity in the districts of south and west Texas. Rather this bill says to those areas who have been reducing their cotton acreage because they can profit more by diversifying their farming endeavors, we want you to plant cotton. We have a bill that will give you a quota that will help keep you in cotton, a quota that will help stop this trend of diversification of farming, a bill that will help stop those new areas of Texas with their modernized and mechanized production from farming their just share of the cotton acreage. A bill that does not concentrate on giving quotas to where cotton is planted, but to giving quotas based on history of what was planted as far back as 1945. This bill says let us go back to the year 1945 and see what you planted in the way of cotton then. Let us not start with the year 1947, when the new areas of Texas were reaching the peak of their progress. Nineteen forty-seven, when thousands of war veterans were planting their cotton in these new areas of Texas, on new lands because the land with the old cotton histories was beyond reach in price. In short, this provision in this bill for Texas says, "Let us stop progress and trends: let us continue business as usual." Not only does this bill drastically reduce cotton acreage of the districts who have been expanding their production of 1947 and 1948, but it goes a step further to punish these new areas. The bill gives to the affected counties a 1950 cotton acreage history equal to the acreage which would have been allotted if this year's State allotment had been apportioned on the basis of 4 years instead of 2 years.

It was stated last Thursday in the debate, "it does not make any difference to those who live in other States of the Union whether Texas operates under the provisions of this law or operates under the provisions of the present law. The State as a whole will get exactly the same." This is correct insofar as saying that Texas as a whole will get exactly the same, but I cannot help but believe that it does make a difference to the Members of this House if an injustice is done within the boundaries of any State as a result of the legislation passed by this House. It has been pointed out that of the 21 congressional districts in Texas, 17 received less acreage because of the use of a 2-year average for 1950 quotas. I put it to you that a majority in numbers alone does not make it right that the acreage of these 4 districts should be divided among the other 17.

Now, I say to my 17 friends and colleagues from Texas who may covet that which I believe rightfully belongs to the farmers of my district by law, study this bill and its applicable quotas carefully before voting for it.

A table was placed in the RECORD Thursday which showed that 17 of our Texas congressional districts would receive more cotton under this bill than under Public Law 272. The joker in this table is that it does not show you your true 1950 quotas after the passage of Public Law 471. Actually, according to estimated figures prepared by Mr. B. F. Vance, chairman of the State committee in Texas, out of 254 counties in Texas, only 71 will receive a higher quota for 1951 under this bill than that received in 1950. Eleven of the 21 congressional districts will receive less cotton quota under this bill than was allotted them in 1950. I ask you to try to explain to your farmers why you voted for a bill that in the great majority of the counties in Texas reduced their quotas for 1951 below what they were in 1950. Reduced their quotas at a time when the country faces its most serious international crisis since World War II. Reduced their quotas when we are spending that farmer's tax money to stockpile rubber, manganese, tin, copper, and yet this country faces a rapidly dwindling Government stockpile of cotton, which is just as essential and which has dropped from over 6,000,000 bales on January 1, 1950, to less than 4,000,000 bales today and is continuing to rapidly drop.

I ask your help in defeating this bill.

I will vote against its passage.

A MISTAKE—NEVER INTENDED

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, as disclosed here on the floor by a number of speakers, the amount of cotton received by the four districts referred to as favored districts, and I do not criticize their Members for defending the rights of their constituents to have anything that is good for them, was purely a mistake. It was never intended. Our people—the people in Texas—were trying to help the States, like California, New Mexico, and Missouri write a special formula for the benefit of those special cases because they would be discriminated against without this special formula. It was thoroughly understood at all times it would never apply to Texas and it would not have applied to Texas, except for the fact that some person in the Department of Agriculture discovered two gins out there in west Texas that had ginned, it was claimed, 93 bales more of cotton that particular year than the records disclosed. The records that the committee were acting on were the records which did not include the 93 bales of cotton. So, discovering the 93 extra bales only, Texas came within that special formula intended for Missouri, New Mexico, and California, and coming under that formula which was never intended, it gave our distinguished friend from the Nineteenth District [Mr. MAHON] 355,000 extra acres of cotton in 1950, which was never intended to be given to him or his district. We want all districts treated the same, and just like other districts are treated.

As a result of that, in the eastern part of the State and in the middle section of the State where we have small cotton growers, they were discriminated against. They could not get as much as a half acre of cotton allotted to them to plant, and now where they have planted an acre and a half, some of them have to plow up half of that cotton, because, by reason of that accident, they came within the California formula and all this acreage was transferred to west Texas. That is not right.

Hundreds of families in east Texas and central Texas have been denied the right to make a living with their hands by producing cotton which they have always produced, by reason of this mistake which was made. May I inform you, too, that many of these families are headed by veterans who came back from the war and now are unable to make an honest and decent living performing their duties as farmers as they have always performed because that mistake was made.

Thousands of World War veterans with distinguished records have been denied the privilege of making a living because of that mistake. So all we are doing is asking you to right a wrong. A wrong has been committed—accidentally—never intended—never intended in the world—but it has been actually committed. And certain parts of our State and thousands of our people have been discriminated against and denied the privilege and opportunity of earning a living on the farm because of that mistake.

We are asking you to carry out the original intent of the law by voting against the Mahon amendment and voting for this bill in that respect as it is now written.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. If we vote down the Mahon amendment the State committee will have 10 percent of the State allotment of 760,000 acres with which they can adjust any inequity?

Mr. PATMAN. Certainly. Not only that, each county will have 15 percent to make adjustments within the county. We should leave this to Texas, and let the Texas committees handle it. That is the way the bill is written, and I hope the bill, as written in that respect, is adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] has expired.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the good faith of the United States Government is involved here. The issue is a very simple one. Back in 1945 this Congress passed a bill which is known as Public Law No. 12, a copy of which I hold in my hand. It was approved February 28, 1945. In that Public Law No. 12 the Congress told the cotton farmers of America that in future allotment programs they would be given credit for war crops which they were encouraged to raise during war times for war purposes and to better meet the demands of the war emergency. Acting in accordance with that public law, and believing, of course, in the good faith of the Federal Government in pursuance of that law, many of the farmers turned to war crops. Now, with the war over, and it being found necessary to impose quotas and restrict the number of acres that can be planted, the farmers find to their amazement, as a result of a departmental interpretation of the law that we passed last fall, that the Texas farmers did not get credit for war crops as they had been assured in Public Law No. 12. Is there anyone who will say that they were not assured in 1945 that they would be given credit for the war crops? Of course not. Everyone knows that is part of that law. It constitutes a contract between the Federal Government and the cotton farmers of America, those who wanted to be included in its provisions.

It happens that a few States had a situation which was unusual, and they brought that to the attention of the committee. They made a special gadget to take care of their particular situation. Everyone understood it did not apply to Texas. There is not a single member of the Committee on Agriculture, from what they have said and from what I have heard previously, who understood it to apply to the State of Texas. But because of the interpretation it was made to apply. Now, to undertake to perpetuate an old law which was misinterpreted, and which would deprive the Texas cotton farmers of their rights to war-crop allotments in making credit during this base period, would be to break faith with the farmers, and, as I have pointed out, contrary to Public Law No. 12. The good faith of the Government is involved. I do not see how this Congress could be impressed by the argument that Texas should be put under a special gadget, which was never intended by the law last fall, and contrary to the intention of the members of the committee and which would be contrary to the express provisions of Public Law No. 12, upon which the farmers in the part of the country where I live have always depended.

If there are injustices which arise in any congressional district or in any part of the State, they can be corrected through withholding the 760,000 acres by the State committee and reassignment to areas which have been adversely affected, where they can show that they are entitled to it.

So, Mr. Chairman, I earnestly hope that this committee will keep Texas where it belongs; that is, in the same category with Mississippi, Georgia, and most of the southern cotton-producing States. Give them the credit that they were told they would have in 1945. Do not treat them differently. All we want is the same identical treatment as is given the other cotton-producing States.

As far as my individual district is concerned, we want no advantage over any other district in Texas. We want the same formula to apply, and we want that formula to be in accordance with what the farmers were told they would have when Public Law 12 was written in 1945. When we have that we have no right to ask for more.

It is our belief that Texas is entitled to the same treatment as the other States. We do not want any more, and we do not think we are entitled to have any less.

Mr. TEAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, there is little complaint in my district concerning the amount of acreage this year or last year, but there is considerable complaint as to the way the county committees are to allocate that cotton. For that reason I should like to ask some member of the committee three questions. The first question is: Does the bill require the county committee to allocate cotton to a farm where cotton was planted in 1941 for the last time and war crops were grown in 1947, but the planter intends to plant no cotton in 1950 or future years? Can the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] answer that, please?

Mr. PACE. The gentleman has reference to the war crop credit? It is necessary for farms to have a 1950 cotton allotment in order to get the benefit of the war crop credit.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEAGUE. I yield.

Mr. ALBERT. The gentleman is talking about another matter. Any cotton farmer has the right under this law to surrender his acreage; he does not have to plant it if he does not want to.

Mr. TEAGUE. But if this farmer planted cotton for the last time in 1941, then planted war crops in 1947, the county committee is required to allocate cotton acreage even if he does not intend to plant cotton in future years?

Mr. ALBERT. He would be entitled to a cotton quota.

Mr. TEAGUE. Is not the county committee forced to allot him whether he plants cotton or not?

Mr. ALBERT. That is correct.

Mr. TEAGUE. And will continue to be entitled to this allotment in future years if not planted.

Mr. ALBERT. Yes; if it is not planted.

Mr. TEAGUE. Does the gentleman think it would be fair, then, to let that county committee reallocate that acreage?

Mr. ALBERT. That authority is in the law, if it is voluntarily surrendered.

Mr. TEAGUE. But if it is not voluntarily surrendered the county committee would not have the authority to reallocate the acreage.

Mr. ALBERT. No. The same principle applies in any other State of the Union.

Mr. TEAGUE. Is this bill more flexible than Public Law 272 in the matter of allotments?

Mr. ALBERT. Much more.

Mr. TEAGUE. In what way? Will the gentleman state, please?

Mr. ALBERT. Certainly. The language is such as to make reserves mandatory. Another thing, it contains the right to surrender and reallocate. For another thing, the 65-percent base which was an addition to Public Law 272 by Public Law 471 is maintained. In a number of ways the bill is more flexible and will allow greater latitude on the part of the county committee and the State committee in allocating the acreage allotted to them.

Mr. TEAGUE. Mr. Chairman, later I will offer an amendment which gives county committees authority to reallocate cotton which is not planted within the county. Time and again it has been said to me by county committee after county committee that we have plenty of acreage allotment for our counties if we could only put it on farms where the producers want to grow cotton. Now, Mr. Chairman, my proposal that the county committee be given more latitude in making allotments to farms is based upon the fact that I believe county and community committees are in a better position to know the individual circumstances in our respective communities and counties and therefore are in better position to make just and equitable allotments to bona fide cotton producers in the county than any formula could possibly give the farmers particularly if that formula is applied to all cotton farmers in the Nation.

I believe these committees will assume the responsibility, and since they are elected by the farmers in the community and county, if they do not assume the responsibility in the making of equitable allotments they will be replaced and others will be put on the committees to do the job for the following year.

Mr. Chairman, I want to quote a part of a letter which I received this morning as a result of a request of mine from Mr. B. F. Vance, the chairman of our State PMA committee:

> Just today I discussed the county allotments with the chairmen of the county committees in 12 east Texas counties, and each chairman was of the opinion that the allotment received for his county in 1950 was ample if it could have been placed on farms where the farmer desires to plant cotton.

Mr. Vance, as chairman of our State PMA committee, whose other members are Mr. W. Lewis David, Mr. J. R. Adams, Mr. V. L. Cade, Mr. Howard T. Kingsbery, and Mr. Ide P. Trotter, make up the State PMA committee in Texas. This committee from Texas has worked hard and done everything possible to make this bill work the way Congress intended it to work.

Mr. REGAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this seems to be Texas afternoon; we have all been up here. We have some little difference of ideas about this bill, but I do speak in behalf of the Mahon amendment for the reason that I believe your law is adequate to take care of all the discrepancies that may be found throughout the various districts.

I do not think Texas should be singled out and put under any particular gadget. We do not seek any gadgets. We think we ought to be put on a 1-, 2-, or 4-year basis as the State committee sees fit. Let the State committee have a 10 percent leeway there to allocate the acreage among the various counties. We know that under last year's allocation the State committee only saw fit to use a very small part of that 10 percent which was allowed by the law, less than 3 percent, I believe. They allocated cotton to land in many counties that were not planted to cotton. We have in the El Paso Valley land that has been in cotton for more than 50 years, some of it for 100 years. Now, all at once they come along here and find that they are going to come under a special law which will permit the State committee to take from the farms out there some 15,000 acres of land that have been planted to cotton. If the Mahon amendment is adopted, everybody in Texas will receive fair treatment. Under that you have the 10 percent provision. Why do we have to put Texas under a special provision of 4 years when Texas might see fit to do better under the 1-, 2-, or 4-year basis?

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Mahon amendment be given serious consideration in fairness to all of Texas.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the Mahon amendment. The good faith of the Government is at stake. The Congress promised all the farmers in Public Law 12 that in any future acreage allotment programs they would be given credit for war crops planted during the base period. If the pending amendment is adopted, no farmer in Texas will be given credit for one single acre of war crops raised during this base period.

This applies particularly in the north central portion of Texas where many of our farmers, in response to the urgent request of the Government during the war, turned to war crops instead of continuing to plant cotton.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I repeat that the good faith of the Federal Government is involved. This amendment should be defeated.

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, members of the Louisiana delegation have not taken the floor on the bill under consideration for the reason that we have been in constant contact with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE], chairman of the Cotton Subcommittee, and we had been advised of the findings and recommendations of the subcommittee, and while we do not feel that the bill under consideration is perfect, we believe that considering the many phases and complexities of the subject that, the committee has conscientiously done the best job possible in an effort to meet the situation in what they consider a fair, reasonable, and equitable manner.

Early in the year the Louisiana delegation held a meeting in regard to discussing the Cotton Acreage Allotment Act, and I ask permission to include in these remarks a copy of the resolution agreed upon at that meeting by the Members present, as follows:

> The Louisiana delegation in the House of Representatives met today for the purpose of discussing the situation arising out of the application of the Cotton Acreage Allotment Act passed in the last session of Congress. At this meeting were present the following: A. LEONARD ALLEN, OVERTON BROOKS, F. EDWARD HÉBERT, HENRY D. LARCADE, OTTO E. PASSMAN, HALE BOGGS, EDWIN E. WILLIS, and JAMES MORRISON.
> After considerable discussion, the group present unanimously felt that some modification of the act was imperative and that this change should be brought about as quickly as possible in order to reassure cotton farmers and relieve injustices. The discussion centered around proposed changes of the law which would guarantee that no cotton farmer should be compelled to reduce his cotton acreage by more than 30 percent of the average acreage planted during the years 1946, 1947, and 1948. The discussion further centered around the idea of unfreezing unused cotton acreage presently frozen.
> Cotton is still a basic crop in the State of Louisiana; and any action which unduly decreases the production of this staple crop in effect injures the economy of our entire State. In addition to this, any law which in its application results in equities and injustices will produce dissatisfaction among our farm population and cannot bring about wholesome results.

Mr. Chairman, in my own district in Louisiana I met with the leaders of the cotton industry and at that time they agreed upon the general principles indicated in a letter written to me by Mr. G. J. Durbin, district field man, of Baton Rouge, La., which I also ask permission to include at this point, as follows:

> DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
> PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
> Baton Rouge, La., December 20, 1949.
> Congressman HENRY D. LARCADE, Jr.,
> House Office Building,
> Washington, D. C.
> DEAR MR. LARCADE: In accordance with the agreement in the Opelousas meeting yesterday, I am outlining below the thinking of the group from St. Landry, Evangeline, and Acadia Parishes of what changes it might be best for Congress to make in the law for establishing 1950 cotton allotments.
>
> The group felt that farmers having more allotments than they want should be permitted to release part or all of their allotments to the PMA County Committee for reapportionment to other farms which the county committee determines received inequitable allotments. The group also thought that the acreage released should be considered released for 1 year only and that for the purpose of establishing acreage allotments in 1951 and subsequent years the acreage released in 1950 by a farm should be considered the same as acreage planted to cotton in 1950 on that farm.
> This change in the law would not increase the national acreage allotment but would, in the opinion of those attending the meeting, provide a more equitable distribution of the national allotment.
>
> Very truly yours,
>
> G. J. DURBIN,
> District Field Man.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened to most of the debate on the bill under consideration, and I was just a little surprised at the remarks of my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] on the floor on Thursday of last week. The gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] was complaining about the State of California having been discriminated against in the allocation of cotton acreage in favor of the Southern States, and as was well explained by the chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY], instead of being discriminated against, California has a substantial advantage in allocation over the Southern States, and if anything, the shoe is on the other foot.

The same advantage held by California in the present situation also obtains, in my opinion, as obtained in the allocation of acreage for rice. As a matter of fact, I appeared before the House Committee on Agriculture and presented facts and figures and objections by my constituents showing that Louisiana, one of the largest rice-producing States had been discriminated against in the allocation of rice acreage in favor of California and Texas due to the formula used in making the allocation. Of course, it is true that California and Texas increased their rice acreage, as they have increased their cotton acreage in the last 2 years, and taking the 5-year Louisiana average, under the formula used for California and Texas, Louisiana was penalized in their allocation of rice acreage allocation.

Mr. Chairman, I have no quarrel with, nor am I hostile to my neighboring State of Texas, nor to the State of California. On the contrary, I wish to cooperate with both States in any way possible; however, I cannot let the occasion pass without speaking in order to keep the record straight, and at least let it be known that, instead of the State of my good friend, Mr. PHILLIPS, being discriminated against, Califorina has profited and in fact, instead of being discriminated against in the cotton-acreage program—it not only has an advantage in acreage allotment in cotton, but also in rice, at least compared to Louisiana under the formula used in both instances.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I cannot refrain from calling to the attention of the House my insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 27, 1950, outlining the proposed farm plan of the Association of Southern Commissioners of Agriculture, as proposed at a meeting of that association held in Atlanta, Ga., on December 10, 1949, and while I am not an expert on agricultural problems, it is my opinion that this plan is worthy of study by the Agricultural Committees of both Houses and the membership as well. The article discusses the cotton support price problem at length and I believe that the suggestion is worthy of consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BECKWORTH: Page 11, after line 16, insert the following:

"SEC. —. Section 346 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'(e) The penalty provided for in this section shall not apply with respect to cotton produced by any veteran of World War II who is recognized by the county committee as being a cotton farmer if his total acreage planted to cotton during the year in which such cotton was produced did not exceed 5 acres. As used in this subsection the term "veteran of World War II" means a person who served in the active military or naval service of the United States on or after December 7, 1941, and before September 3, 1945, and who has been honorably separated from such service.'"

And renumber the following sections accordingly.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is very brief and very simple. It simply says that if a veteran is recognized by his county committee as being a cotton farmer he can plant 5 acres of cotton without being subject to penalty. It is my opinion that this amendment should go even further, and I do have an amendment that goes further; it would provide that any genuine cotton farmer, if he is recognized by his county committee as being a genuine cotton farmer, would receive a minimum of 5 acres.

It is said over and over again that this legislation is mighty fair, which may be true, but in some instance it has worked injustices, and admittedly so.

I have here a letter from one of the Virginia districts that says:

Number of cotton farmers that received less than 5 acres that will cease to grow cotton: 150.

We have one here:

Number of producers ceasing farming for themselves in 1950: 20 estimated.

That is in one county.

Number of producers receiving less than 5 acres that will not plant cotton: 150.

This is in Wilson County, N. C., incidentally.

Here is another one:

Estimate of number of producers receiving less than 5 acres that will probably grow no cotton in 1950: 100.

This is from your county committees:

Producers receiving less than 5 acres who probably will grow no cotton: 250.

This is from an Alabama county.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, why are they not producing cotton? Because of an insufficient amount of land?

Mr. BECKWORTH. There is no question about that. If you give a person one-tenth or one-seventh or half an acre or 2 acres or 3 acres, you are likely giving him so little that he cannot afford to grow cotton. Incidentally, I am going to include as part of my remarks letters that have come from many cotton States, from commissioners of agriculture, from the Farmers Home Administration, and others, that say it is uneconomic for a person to grow less than 5 acres. In a number of instances these letters say that.

When you talk about aiding the farmer, let us mean not one segment of the farmers. Let us refer to all the farmers. Incidentally, I was pleased when you adopted the Combs amendment. I certainly express my appreciation for the fact that this House did adopt that amendment. That is a good amendment. I happen to know a good deal about that amendment. This, though, is one additional step, and if you truly want to help the family-sized farmer to stay on the farm and earn a living there, it will certainly help to do the job.

Mr. COOLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. Is it the purpose of the amendment to give a minimum acreage of 5 acres to every veteran?

Mr. BECKWORTH. A veteran who is recognized by his county committee as being a genuine cotton farmer; yes, sir.

Mr. COOLEY. That means if a veteran came in and showed that he had a piece of land upon which he could grow 5 acres of cotton, that they would give him 5 acres?

Mr. BECKWORTH. If the county committee said the veteran is a genuine cotton farmer, they would give him 5 acres of cotton to produce.

Mr. COOLEY. So it would be entirely possible that the 14,000,000 veterans of World War II would each receive 5 acres.

Mr. BECKWORTH. The gentleman knows that that is not the case, for this reason: There is no county committee in North Carolina that would recognize a New York City or Brooklyn veteran who would be one of the 14,000,000 you are talking about as a genuine cotton farmer. Incidentally, I have a letter from the Department of Agriculture, which is in the RECORD now, that says that these PMA committees would be in a position to judge which is a genuine farmer and which is not, and I will be glad to show that to the gentleman.

Mr. COOLEY. What is a genuine farmer, except a man who desires to honestly till the soil and to grow something on the soil?

Mr. BECKWORTH. What is "adequate" which is used in this legislation?

Mr. COOLEY. What does the gentleman mean?

Mr. BECKWORTH. What is "adequate"? I will say this, you have to rely on judgment, and your committee is relying on the judgment of these county committees when it talks about reserving an adequate amount up to 10 percent.

Mr. COOLEY. That is right. We reserve 15 percent to the county, and that 15 percent can be used for the very purpose for which the gentleman desires additional acreage.

Mr. BECKWORTH. The gentleman asks, "What is a genuine farmer?" I think it is as easy to identify a genuine farmer by your county committee as it is to know the meaning of the word "adequate."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is plain to see that if this amendment is adopted it would be utterly impossible for the administrators to put into effect any satisfactory program. It would make possible the granting of a 5-acre minimum allotment to every veteran of World War II to the exclusion of all of the veterans of World War I who could show to the satisfaction of the local committee that he was in good faith a farmer and intended to plant the acreage that he was requesting. If you were to grant a 5-acre allotment to all of the veterans, you would throw the whole program out of gear, and it would result in having no program at all.

I should like to say further that the State of Texas is well represented here with two Members of the Texas delegation on the Committee on Agriculture. They have worked diligently in the preparation of this bill. I know that they conducted hearings that extended not only for days and weeks but for months.

The distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH] appeared before our committee, and he was then suffering from no limitation of time. No time was fixed for the presentation of his views. This proposition was never offered in the House Committee on Agriculture. I submit to the House that it is not now worthy of consideration here on the floor of the House. It is ill-advised and entirely improper to single out the veterans of one war, the war that was waged in the days of his age and generation, to the exclusion of those of my age and generation who engaged in World War I. It would be mighty hard for me to sit on a committee and deny to an old soldier of World War I the same fair treatment that the gentleman is anxious to give to the younger men of World War II.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BECKWORTH. The gentleman made the statement that I said nothing about this idea before the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. COOLEY. I said the gentleman did not offer the amendment.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Yes, I did offer some amendments incorporating this very idea, extending it not only to the veterans but to all genuine farmers. If the gentleman will print the hearings, and I ask him to do that, he will certainly find that in the hearings.

Mr. COOLEY. I have the hearings in my hand, and I find that the gentleman's testimony runs from page 703 to 711.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Does the gentleman find the amendment there?

Mr. COOLEY. Let the gentleman come here and see if he can find it.

Mr. BECKWORTH. I know I introduced before the Agriculture Committee an amendment, which in my opinion incorporates this idea.

Mr. COOLEY. Here is the record, if the gentleman wants it.

Mr. BECKWORTH. The gentleman is the one who made the statement. I said I offered the amendment that would extend this idea to everyone who is recognized by the county committee as being a cotton farmer, which would include all veterans, of course.

Mr. COOLEY. Here is the record. I do not have the time to read these pages but I will give them to the gentleman. Will he point out where he offered this amendment?

Mr. BECKWORTH. The gentleman is the one who made the statement. Let him point it out.

Mr. COOLEY. It is not here to point out.

Mr. BECKWORTH. It is there.

Mr. COOLEY. Let the gentleman find it, then.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Let the gentleman find it. He is the one who made the statement, and the statement is just a mistake.

Mr. COOLEY. I have the record here. The gentleman wanted all of the record. Let him show that the amendment was offered.

Mr. Chairman, this is a bad amendment. It ought to be defeated. I should just like to know why the gentleman picked out the men who fought the war in his day to the exclusion of those who fought in World War I.

Mr. BECKWORTH. I did not pick them out. As I stated I have offered and do offer an amendment which includes all farmers including all veterans.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman singles out World War II veterans.

Mr. BECKWORTH. I did not pick them out to the exclusion of anyone. The amendment I have offered before definitely includes all of them.

Mr. COOLEY. How much acreage will the gentleman's amendment take?

Mr. BECKWORTH. How much does the gentleman say it will take?

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman is the one who offered the amendment. So it is plain to see the gentleman does not know anything about the full effect of his amendment. He comes to the floor of the House and offers an amendment to give relief to the veterans of World War II to the exclusion of all other veterans and the exclusion of all other worthy citizens.

Mr. BECKWORTH. I do not interpret my amendments as you do. He asked me how much acreage it would take.

Mr. COOLEY. And what did the gentleman tell me?

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be defeated.

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want and I do not intend to take issue with this fine Committee on Agriculture, but there is some merit to this amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Texas.

I mentioned to you a while ago, during the 5 minutes I had here on the floor, and all of you know many instances just like the one I mentioned. A lot of these fellows who had little, bitty farms went off to the Army. But the fellows who had big plantations stayed here to build up their history which they are now relying on to get this cotton acreage. It has been mentioned that you are taking the World War II veterans and excluding the other veterans. That is not true. The basic period which is under consideration was the period immediately following World War II. Of course the World War I boys were farming and raising cotton during the time of the basic period involved. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas plainly states that only those who are actual cotton farmers would be protected under his amendment, and would receive any benefits from it.

Gentlemen, it is not a laughing proposition. These fellows in my district on these little farms came back home and were not able to go back on the farm in 1945 and 1946 and are excluded under this cotton program by virtue of the legislation now before the House. I honestly and sincerely feel that they are entitled to some consideration—not just merely because they were veterans, but because of the fact they were not allowed to farm and participate at the time they were building the basic period.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TACKETT. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. How about the men who left the farms to go into the shipyards and the munitions plants and all the other war activities? Would you also accord them the right to come back to the farm and get 5 acres of cotton?

Mr. TACKETT. If it were absolutely necessary for them to go to the shipyards and they did not go there to make money, I think they should be included, but that situation is not covered by the proposed amendment.

All these boys whom we are considering here did not go to the shipyards to make money.

Mr. COOLEY. Whom would you authorize to make the determination whether a boy went into a shipyard to make money?

Mr. TACKETT. This amendment does not say anything in the world about shipyards. We are talking about boys who did the fighting, Those are the fellows I am trying to help. If you want to bring in a shipyard amendment, you bring it in.

Mr. COOLEY. I am just asking if you favor that.

Mr. TACKETT. I am not interested in any shipyard amendment.

Mr. COOLEY. You are not interested in the man who left the farm to go into war activities?

Mr. TACKETT. I am interested in those who had to leave the farms.

Mr. COOLEY. That is, only those who were drafted, and not those who volunteered? You would not give a man who volunteered the same benefits?

Mr. TACKETT. Oh, you are trying to get off into deep water where you cannot swim.

Mr. COOLEY. You said only those who were forced to go.

Mr. TACKETT. I have in mind those who actually went, and tried to contribute to the war effort as a soldier.

Mr. COOLEY. And you would give every one of those 5 acres?

Mr. TACKETT. I would give those who were farming, and farming cotton, at the time they left here.

Mr. COOLEY. So if a man had five boys who went into the armed services who came back, he would get 5 acres for each one of those boys?

Mr. TACKETT. Let me tell you something, Mr. COOLEY—just listen a minute—you are not trying to listen.

Mr. COOLEY. No, I am not, because I consider it absolutely ridiculous and unthinkable.

Mr. TACKETT. I know you think it is ridiculous.

Mr. COOLEY. I think it is ridiculous and unthinkable that you should get up on the floor of the House and ask for this sort of an amendment.

Mr. TACKETT. Let me ask you something. Suppose I am a cotton plantation owner and I have 1,000 acres of cotton land which I was farming in 1943. Suppose my neighbor has a little 40-acre farm and he has 5 acres of cotton. Of course I am producing war materials for the war effort. They take this little fellow off the 40-acre farm and send him into the Army. He comes back and he is not able to go on the farm in 1945 or perhaps he is still in the Army. It does not make any difference. He does not have any funds to go back there and raise cotton. He has to try to make a little bit of money to get back on the farm in 1945 and 1946 and 1947. But still the big plantation owner—me—I get the benefit of this legislation that you are passing today to the exclusion of the boy who went over there and fought for the principles of democracy that gave me the opportunity to raise the cotton. Now laugh that off. You know it is true.

Mr. COOLEY. I will not laugh it off.

Mr. TACKETT. You have laughed off every amendment that has come before the House.

Mr. COOLEY. I am just telling you that the farm which that boy was on before he went into the Army still is considered in the history of that farm. The farm is still given the allotment. You fellows who were not here and did not help draft the basic legislation do not seem to understand that no provision is made for any man, the provision is made for the farm, and not to the farmer.

Mr. TACKETT. That is exactly my complaint.

Mr. COOLEY. That is the reason why you want to change the whole philosophy.

Mr. TACKETT. No; I do not want to change the whole philosophy. I want to help those fellows who did not have an opportunity to build up a cotton-planting history.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Chairman, I realize that it is necessary to have a cotton allotment program if the Government is going to subsidize the farmers in raising cotton. I fully realize that I do not want to tear down the cotton program, but I do think there should be some exceptions to the cotton program. I do not know of a better exception than the one the gentleman from Texas has brought to the attention of the House. You men who live out in the country know, as I do, that it is not fair for the plantation owners to get all the cotton and the little farmers, who were excluded from the opportunity of growing cotton, to participate in the program. That is exactly what you are doing.

When I was home a few days ago I talked with 10 or 12 fellows who were raising cotton before they went to war in 1943. They came back in 1945 and 1946 and were not able to go back on the farm because they did not have the money to do it with. They eventually got back out there. The GI fund that this Congress provided gave them an opportunity to go back to the farm, and now they cannot raise cotton. They were just as good cotton raisers before the war tore up their economy and tore up their way of living. Certainly, the fellows in World War I and the Spanish-American veterans were raising cotton and they were not hampered in any way from building a record. But the World War II veterans were hampered.

I have never stood up here and insisted that all the legislation in this House should be on behalf of the veterans. I do not think the veterans should, or desire, to tear up the economy of this country, but I honestly and sincerely feel that they should be able to go back and raise cotton as they were doing before they were taken off the farm. I do not see anything wrong in this Congress giving them an opportunity to go back and raise cotton. I do not believe there will be such a great number of acres involved in any event.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

Mr. COOLEY. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes, 5 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. PATMAN. Reserving the right to object, does that include 5 minutes for me?

Mr. COOLEY. Five minutes for the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORRIS], 5 minutes for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], and 5 minutes to be reserved for the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY], as modified?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, this appears to me to be a good amendment. I do not believe it will add 1 acre to the requirements, assuming that the law will be administered equitably and fairly. I will tell you why. In the first place, in answer to a suggestion that has been made, I can assure you that the veterans who live in the Northern States are not going to flock down to the Southern States to get 5 acres of cotton. Anyone who knows anything in the world about cotton knows that that will not happen.

In the second place, it only applies to half a dozen, a handful, figuratively speaking and proportionately speaking, because nearly everybody is going to get far more than 5 acres. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH] is trying to see that the little fellow is guaranteed at least 5 acres. Nearly everybody gets far more than 5 acres. He wants to see that nobody gets less than 5 acres.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman know that in the State of North Carolina 50 percent of the farmers receive less than 5 acres? That shows what an important problem we are dealing with.

Mr. MORRIS. That is a deplorable condition. I am sorry the gentleman has to make that admission. If that is true, there ought to be a change in the law, because that is not right.

Mr. COOLEY. That is true in seven other States.

Mr. MORRIS. It just is not right that that situation should develop, and that is why this amendment should be adopted. Anyone who is a valid farmer ought not to have less than 5 acres of cotton; that just should not be.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORRIS. I would like to yield to my colleague from Georgia [Mr. PACE], but I hope he will let me proceed just a little further.

If this amendment prevails it will be to the general country just what the recent amendment was to California. We gave a similar right to California just a few moments ago, did we not?

This amendment does not go far enough. I am going to support this amendment, and I am going to support the amendment the gentleman from Texas has indicated giving every valid farmer in America the right to have at least 5 acres. If we cannot write a law here, Mr. Chairman, giving the people of this country who validly grow cotton at least 5 acres apiece, there is something wrong.

I want to express my sincere gratitude and appreciation to this great Committee on Agriculture—and what I say here is not intended in any way as a criticism of this great committee. I wish the gentleman from North Carolina would give me his attention. I have watched the gentleman from North Carolina, the chairman of this great committee; and I have watched the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE], chairman of the great subcommittee, and these other members, and our own beloved member from Oklahoma [Mr. ALBERT]; I have watched them work diligently week after week. You gentleman have performed a great service to agriculture in this country. I take my hat off to you; as a matter of fact, you draw me to your hearts by reason of the efforts that you have made, and I am not standing here criticizing you. I am merely suggesting to you that you with all of your greatness, with all of your astuteness, with all of the energy that you have put into this bill, you are not omnipotent, neither am I, and neither is the great Speaker of this House; neither is the President of the great United States. No one is omnipotent. We all make mistakes, and you are making a serious mistake, in my estimation, great as you are, in opposing an amendment like this, because it is a guaranty to the little fellow that he at least will have enough money out of his year's work to buy his children just a little food to eat and just a few things to wear. I know, of course, that the speech I am making might indicate that I am kind of demagoging here, but I most certainly am not. I do not intend to mail this speech out to my constituents. As a matter of fact I have never mailed out to my constituents even one, no not one of those I have made since I have been here. Not one speech have I mailed to my constituents in the 3½ years I have been here. No, my friends, I am not demagoging, I am in dead earnest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Time for debate has been limited.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. PATMAN. There are many veterans who have purchased homes from the Farmers Home Administration. They are in this ironical position: They are honest, hardworking people and could pay for their homes if they were privileged to produce as much as 5 acres of cotton per year. They are not privileged to do that, and a lot of them cannot even make payments to a Government agency for the farm home they have purchased, because of their inability to get the small amount of 5 acres of cotton allotted to them.

One of the best bills we passed preceding the end of the war was the GI bill of rights which gave these boys an opportunity to finish up their education after they got out of the service. One of the greatest losses we had during World War II, outside of the loss of life and limb, was the educational loss of these fine young men. We induced them, and properly so, to go back to school and to college and to follow up their education that was interrupted by their war service. But by reason of that act which we passed which was attractive to them, they lose their cotton allotment when they come back home, and the county committees know that they are genuine farmers. They are genuine farmers, but they cannot get an allotment of even 5 acres. Sometimes a half acre is provided them. As the gentleman from Texas mentioned here a while ago, many county committees will tell you frankly that less than 5 acres is an uneconomic operation of a farm. You cannot successfully operate a cotton farm with less than 5 acres of cotton.

We are beginning to see monopoly rear its ugly head in the farming business. Did you know that since it has been made so attractive for farmers to make an honest living, if they work for it, the factory-type farm is coming into being? Did you know that last year 1.7 percent of the farmers produced 25 percent of the farm income?

I may say to the chairman of this committee that if the 5 acres is too large, why does he not suggest something else? I ask him to give this serious consideration because it is not an idle dream. It is something that means a great deal and should have careful consideration. If the 5 acres is too much, tell us why and offer something that will be fair. In the end this acreage will probably come principally from the factory-type farm, the 1.7 percent that are producing 25 percent of the farm income.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. Under the law for 1949 We provided that anyone who had planted less than 5 acres during the 3-year period would not be required to make any contribution to the reduction program. In other words, he would have an allotment exempt from any reduction of his planted acreage.

Mr. PATMAN. Does the gentleman mean exempt him under 5 acres?

Mr. COOLEY. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. Yes, but say it is one-tenth of an acre. He is still exempt.

Mr. COOLEY. We permit him to plant the highest amount of acreage he had planted in the 3-year period.

Mr. PATMAN. Suppose he was going to school under the GI bill of rights and he is away from home. He has lost his cotton acreage. Why can he not come back and reclaim that cotton acreage?

Mr. COOLEY. I can read from the law the protection which we already have for the boy who was forced to give up growing cotton and had to go to war. The gentleman is not familiar with the law now on the books.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman do that in his own time?

Mr. COOLEY. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. The question here is, Are you going to discriminate against the veterans who are going to school and who lost their allotments in favor of the factory-type farm that has been growing cotton and getting bigger and bigger and bigger during the past 5 or 10 years? Are you in favor of giving this veteran just a small acreage of 5 when it will not come from any others except those who have greatly increased their acreage during this time of prosperity on the farm? We should not further encourage the factory-type farm. We should encourage the family-type farm.

The way to get away from even the danger of socialism and communism in this country is to encourage farm and home ownership. We are encouraging farm ownership, but you cannot continue it fully unless you give the man enough acres to make a living on that farm.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to repeat here again that when the Secretary of Agriculture says there shall be but so many acres of cotton produced in a year, when you give it to somebody you have to take it away from somebody.

Do not be too much misled by this veteran angle. We have had similar proposals before the committee. Well over half of the cotton farmers today are veterans. Do not go wild about the veteran end of it. What about the veteran who has 6 acres and that is all he has? Are you going to come along and take something away from him?

There is no such thing, Mr. Chairman, as just getting cotton acreage out of thin air. You do not have any quotas when that goes on. Like this year we are going to have so many bales of cotton that require so many acres; then whenever you go out and give to somebody, you must take. In 1945 we passed an act and provided that every cotton farmer who left his farm to go into the service, he will be regarded as having planted cotton every hour he was in the service. That is Public Law 12, of the Seventy-ninth Congress. It says that when he is in the service he is taken care of, and that is the only question that his amendment applies to, because the gentleman's amendment says that the county committee must regard him as a cotton farmer, and he cannot be a cotton farmer under this amendment unless he was planting cotton before the war. Every one of them are being taken care of now if, as a matter of fact, he was a real cotton farmer and wanted to get back into cotton production.

But, in addition to that I want to repeat again that we have given to the State committee of Texas the right to reserve 760,000 acres and give every acre of it to the veterans if they want to. We have authorized every county committee in the State of Texas to reserve 15 percent of the county allotment and give every acre of it to the veterans. We cannot get an estimate as to what this would take in acreage, but the gentleman offered a similar amendment last year when the bill was up, which was defeated, and then we did get an estimate that it could take from five to ten million acres. If you do not have but 20,000,000 acres allocated, and this amendment giving veterans 5 acres, that will take five or ten million acres, what are all the other veterans that are really cotton farmers going to have? Where are they going to get their cotton acreage? You do not have but so much to allot.

What we have done in the bill is to put that into the hands of the home people. If the county committee wants to give every acre of it to a group of veterans, they have the right to do so. But, I appeal to you, do not wreck the entire program to meet a situation that happens to exist down in one county of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH]. He has been talking about that county for the last 18 months. I am willing for him to put a local amendment in here to take care of that county if the other Members from Texas will agree. But, my friends, please do not wreck the entire program. Do not destroy the whole equitable system that has been set up. We have no State lines on this amendment.

The gentleman from California was in here this morning talking about his situation. Let me tell you that if this amendment goes in, it utterly destroys the protection that our States have now, because whenever this group can come in and take five or ten million acres, then you take whatever is left, that is all. As I say, you are taking it from veterans and you are giving it to veterans who now, under the law, if they were honest, real cotton farmers, could go back and get it under the law as it now exists.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BECKWORTH) there were—ayes 15, noes 46.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TEAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TEAGUE: On page 8, line 8, after "is", strike out "voluntarily surrendered to the county committee" and insert "not to be planted."

Mr. TEAGUE. Mr. Chairman, under present law the county committee is forced to allocate cotton to any farm which last planted cotton in 1941, planted war crops in 1947, and has no intent of planting cotton again. This amendment will give the county committee authority to take that allotment and reallocate it within that county to a farm which will plant cotton.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEAGUE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. Would the gentleman help us by trying to explain how the county committee could ever find out, if the planting season was over, whether or not a man was going to plant his allotment?

Mr. TEAGUE. On line 10 the bill states that "under regulations prescribed by the Secretary." Therefore he can require that a farmer say whether or not he is going to plant his cotton.

Mr. PACE. We have attempted to do that in here. We say if he is not going to do it, he can surrender it.

Mr. TEAGUE. The gentleman from Georgia well knows that in cotton districts the value of your land is based on your cotton allotment. Therefore, most farmers refuse to surrender the acreage which they do not plant because they are afraid they will lose that allotment to their farm.

Mr. PACE. The farmer loses as much by not planting as he does by surrender. He does not gain anything by hanging onto it and not planting.

Mr. TEAGUE. If the farmer does not plant over a certain period he loses that acreage and the State loses that acreage. This amendment gives the county committee that acreage, and they will keep it within the county and keep it within the State.

Mr. PACE. I just do not see how the county committee could know until after the planting season was over whether he is going to plant.

Mr. TEAGUE. Is it not true this is the same provision that is in the wheat law?

Mr. PACE. I am not familiar with that.

Mr. TEAGUE. One member of the gentleman's staff just told me it was.

Mr. PACE. What the committee did was to say that you can determine when a man is going to plant it by going to him and asking him, "Are you going to plant it?" "No." "Will you sign this surrender?" That closes the book.

Mr. TEAGUE. If he says "No," there is nothing you can do about that acreage, and the great majority of the cotton farmers will not surrender their county acreage.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEAGUE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. Suppose the gentleman's amendment is agreed to, and by the middle of May a farmer has not planted, and the county comes to him and says, "Do you intend to plant that acreage?" and he says, "Yes," would the gentleman still suggest the county committee should go ahead and take that cotton away from him?

Mr. TEAGUE. If there is evidence to indicate he has not planted it and that he will not plant it.

Mr. POAGE. What would be that evidence?

Mr. TEAGUE. If he has not planted cotton since 1941, and he has made no preparation to plant, I would say that was sufficient evidence that he was not going to plant it this year.

Will the gentleman answer my question about wheat? Is not this the same provision that is in the wheat law?

Mr. POAGE. I confess I am not familiar with the wheat law. Perhaps it is not in the wheat law, but the wheat law allows a great deal more liberality on the part of the local committees than the cotton law does. If we want to change the cotton law so that we do not have legislation, but simply leave it up to the county committee, of course this bill goes a long way in that direction. However, it strikes me the bill goes about as far in that direction as we can afford to go.

Mr. TEAGUE. The county committee is elected by the people in the county, and I would have no fear as to what that county committee might do as far as reallocating this cotton acreage is concerned.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEAGUE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Suppose farmer A, who grew cotton in 1941, has a 25-acre allotment coming to him, say for 1951, if he wants to use it.

He states he does not intend to plant for 1951, and they allocate the acreage to some other land. What is his status in the spring of 1952?

Mr. TEAGUE. On page 8, line 15, the bill reads:

Any transfer of acreage in 1950 shall not operate to reduce the allotment base for any subsequent year for the farm from which such acreage is transferred.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, by stating any particular year that he does not intend to grow cotton that year, he does not lose the right to grow cotton for some subsequent year.

Mr. TEAGUE. But if he does not plant it over a certain period, he loses it, the county loses it and the State loses it.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEAGUE. I yield.

Mr. PACE. I want to correct that. The next year and the years after he does lose it. We simply said that he did not lose it in 1950, because of the act that we passed in April we said he would not. But we have changed that, and hereafter he will lose it.

Mr. TEAGUE. He will lose it.

If you transfer it or do not plant it, you lose it. That is, if you do that for 3 years.

Mr. CRAWFORD. So that you come to the spring of 1951, and you say: "Are you going to plant this acreage"——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the pending amendment close in 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. MORRIS. A short while ago I was stopped in midair.

Mr. COOLEY. I am sorry.

Mr. MORRIS. That was unfair to me. Not that the gentleman from North Carolina was unfair, but the situation was. I made a statement which might on its face appear as if I was making a demagogic statement. But I say to the gentleman and to the Members of the House that I was not. I was in dead earnest. I have not sent out one speech—not one in 3½ years—and I was not making the speech to be broadcast. I was making it because I believe in the justice of this amendment. I have not sent out any speech, and I do not intend to send this one out.

Mr. COOLEY. I agree that the gentleman was left hanging in mid-air because of the circumstances which we faced at the time, to wit, that the time had been fixed.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. POAGE. May I call attention to the fact that if we adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, it will leave any man who tried to diversify by planting cotton only 1 year out of 3 in such position that I do not see how he can continue with his program.

Mr. TEAGUE. The Secretary has the right to write the regulation on that, and what the gentleman states in my opinion is not correct.

Mr. COOLEY. The law provides that if he does not plant once in 3 years he loses it, and if he does plant once in 3 years he retains it. As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE] says, we are trying to encourage a program of diversified agriculture so that farmers would engage in rotation practices, and I am very much afraid that the gentleman's amendment would destroy that program.

Mr. TEAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. TEAGUE. The State chairman of Texas wrote this yesterday:

I discussed the county allotments with the chairmen of county committees in 12 east Texas counties, and each chairman was of the opinion that the allotment received for his county in 1950 was ample if it could have been placed on farms where the farmer desired to plant cotton.

Mr. COOLEY. That is right, but if the farmer desired to surrender his acreage, he may voluntarily do so.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. TEAGUE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BECKWORTH: On page 11, after line 16, insert the following:

"Section 346 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection (e) the penalty provided for in this section shall not apply with respect to cotton produced by any person who is recognized by the county committee as being a cotton farmer if his total acreage planted to cotton during the year in which such cotton was produced did not exceed 5 acres."

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment that was mentioned several times a while ago.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment, and all amendments thereto, close in 7 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment, and all amendments thereto, close in 7 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, as I said, this is the amendment that has been talked about heretofore. I offered it a year ago, on August 3. Incidentally, things have not been nearly as serene today as they were a year ago. It is obvious there have been inequities existing in the year gone by.

I do want to say this: that there have been some figures used here. Five million and ten million were used as an estimate a year ago. Those same figures were used. I happen to have the August 3 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and here is what I said:

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] spoke about 6,000,000 bales. On July 25 the Department wrote me a letter as to the number of farmers growing five bales or less, on an average, and there were 601,273.

Now, that refers to bales, but it also gets its origin from the acres, which is found in the August 3, 1949, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I said there:

It would be interesting, indeed, when we consider the fact that I have here a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, written on July 5, 1949, that this particular figure I have given, and I ask Mr. PACE to supply the source of his figures.

Later on Mr. PACE wrote me this year. I answered that letter, and I asked Mr. PACE again to give me the source of his figures. Before the House I simply want to ask that the source of these figures and the figures be given to me, that I might find them, because honestly I have not been able to find any such figures. The contrary is true. I have these figures that were supplied me on July 25, 1949, by the Department of Agriculture (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 95, part 8, p. 10710), the latest figures I have been able to get. If we have later figures, I simply want to courteously ask that they be given.

Mr. PACE. Do you want me to give them to you now?

Mr. BECKWORTH. No. I asked you in a letter, and you have not answered my letter. I also stated in the August 3, 1949, RECORD that I would appreciate your giving me the figures. All I ask him courteously today is to send me the figures.

This shows that 601,273 farmers were growing 9 acres or less—not 5 acres or less—in 1945, out of over 1,000,000 growers. If all of them grew 5 acres, that would be only a little over 3,000,000 acres, and it is for that reason that I am anxious to get the source of the 6,000,000 or the 10,000,000 figure, in writing, or on the floor of the House, as I have heretofore requested. I think it will be conducive to helping clarify this whole picture. I assure you I will be very grateful to have it.

This same amendment which I am referring to would simply permit any recognized cotton farmer to have 5 acres of cotton. Incidentally, in many sections that will not grow more than two bales of cotton; in fact, not two bales. I propose to include in the RECORD at this point some figures and some letters from authoritative agricultural people showing that.

My suggestion is this: If you cannot do this for the smallest, there is something wrong with the program, because I do not believe anybody will make the argument that he feels a man can go out and produce 5 acres of cotton and make very much of a living doing it if this is his chief money crop. I do not think anybody will make the argument that that can be done, if that is his primary money crop. If anybody feels that that is his primary money crop and he can make a living on 5 acres of land, I would be glad to have him express himself, that a man can do well when and if that is his main money crop.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I yield.

Mr. MORRIS. As a matter of fact these reservations of the State and county committees in substance are intended to relieve hardship cases, are they not?

Mr. BECKWORTH. That is exactly right.

Mr. MORRIS. If it is carried out as it should be, no one should have less than 5 acres, should they?

Mr. BECKWORTH. There are many, as will appear from the RECORD tomorrow who say that is their belief.

Mr. MORRIS. Then, the truth of the matter is that this would just be guaranteeing to the little fellow that he would have 5 acres.

Mr. BECKWORTH. That is right. You could not tell him: "You can have one-tenth of an acre, one-half of an acre, that is all." You could not tell him a thing like that.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 27, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: This will confirm the information given to you by telephone today to the effect that we have had no request from the House Committee on Agriculture, nor have we reported to them on H. R. 9109.

Sincerely yours,

E. J. OVERBY,
Assistant to the Secretary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 28, 1950.

Mr. B. F. VANCE,
Production and Marketing Administration, College Station, Tex.

DEAR MR. B. F. VANCE: I have received the letter of July 26 and the list which you sent me at the request of Mr. TEAGUE. You mention 12 East Texas counties. I would like a list of the counties to which you refer.

Sincerely.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
College Station, Tex., July 26, 1950.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: At the request of Congressman TEAGUE I am enclosing herewith a list of Texas counties giving the 1950 county cotton allotments under Public Law 272 and the total allotment after applying Public Law 471. In the last column I have listed the approximate allotment each county would receive in 1951 under H. R. 8969, assuming that the national allotment will be the same in 1951 as was announced in 1950 before Public Law 471 was passed. You realize, of course, that these figures are purely estimates since the bill provides for certain adjustments and I am not in a position to know just what adjustments would be made when all the facts are available.

I am of the opinion that certain amendments should be made in the present law; however, I think the most urgent need is for more flexibility in making allotments to farms. Just today I discussed the county allotments with the chairmen of the county committees in 12 East Texas counties, and each chairman was of the opinion that the allotment received for his county in 1950 was ample if it could have been placed on farms where the farmer desired to plant cotton.

I hope this information will be of value to you.

Very truly yours,

B. F. VANCE,
Chairman, State Committee.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: Your letter of inquiry regarding the minimum number of acres in cotton a family of a man, wife, and three or four children need in order to make a living in the South was referred to our Mr. C. A. Bonnen who heads up our research work in farm management. Mr. Bonnen has written you giving you the benefits of such research and observations that we have made along this line. I have discussed this with Mr. Bonnen and have no further comment to offer. I feel that the most comprehensive and useful study that has been made along this line was that made by the Southwide Committee of which Dean Frank Welch, of Mississippi State, was chairman.

Sincerely yours,

L. P. GABBARD,
Head of Department.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: I am sending your letter of May 25, 1950, to the research division of A. and M. College and asking that they make reply to your inquiry; namely, what is the minimum number of acres in cotton a family of a man, wife, and three or four children need in order to make a living in the South.

Very truly yours,

STERLING C. EVANS,
President.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FARMERS HOME ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., June 6, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: This acknowledges your inquiry of May 13, 1950, regarding the minimum number of acres of cotton the average family in the upland area of the South, with cotton as the primary money crop, would need in order to make a living for the family.

Such an estimate, as you well appreciate, would need to be based on average conditions, because of soil type, rate of fertilization, kind of power available, and other conditions that influence production. The average gross cash income of our operating loan borrowers in Texas for the 1948 crop year was $2,283. The average gross cash income of such borrowers in Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Oklahoma for the same period ranged from $1,381 to $2,204. The operating loan borrowers referred to are operators of not larger than family-type farms to whom the Farmers Home Administration has advanced production loans. To produce a gross cash farm income of $2,000 under present market prices, with 80 percent of the income from cotton, would require 16 acres, averaging approximately 450 pounds of lint cotton per acre.

Throughout the cotton areas of the South, there are many thousands of farmers who produce less than an average of 450 pounds of lint cotton per acre. For such farmers to obtain a gross cash farm income of $2,000 would require a proportionately larger acreage of cotton or the making of adjustments in their farming operations to provide additional sources of income.

Should additional information regarding this question or any phase of our activities be desired, we shall be glad to furnish it upon request.

Sincerely yours,

DILLARD B. LASSETER,
Administrator.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: Your communication of May 15 is requested our judgment as to the minimum number of acres in cotton the average upland family in the south, with cotton as their primary money crop, would need in order to make a living for the family. Such an estimate, as you well appreciate, involves many variables but, in my opinion, a minimum of 15 acres would be required.

Sincerely yours,

JULIAN BROWN,
State Director.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of May 13, addressed to the Commissioner of Agriculture, you are advised that the number of acres of cotton necessary to meet the needs of a family of five varies with the general type of farming done by the particular family. In some instances six or eight acres might be sufficient, in other cases three or four times that number of acres might be required. Since we have no factual data on this subject, we are hesitant in suggesting a minimum acreage.

I am sorry that we are unable to give you some definite information.

Very truly yours,

J. C. GARRETT,
Agricultural Statistician.

ALABAMA POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE,

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: Your letter addressed to the Alabama A. & M. College at Auburn has been referred to me. I am sorry to have to report that it is quite impossible to give you an answer to your question that can be defended.

In certain areas it may take 4 acres of cotton to make a bale, while in other areas a bale per acre can be made with no great difficulty under average seasonal conditions. The number of bales of cotton that might be picked depends on the number of persons in the family who might be willing or forced to pick cotton. A number of these kinds of considerations might be listed, all of which show that a real, usable answer cannot be given to your question.

Very truly yours,

M. J. FUNCHESS,
Dean and Director.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of May 26, addressed to the Commissioner of Agriculture, you are advised that the number of acres of peanuts necessary to meet the needs of a family of five varies with the general type of farming done by that particular family. In some instances 6 or 8 acres might be sufficient, in other cases three or four times that number of acres might be required. Since we have no factual data on this subject, we are hesitant in suggesting a minimum acreage.

Congressman LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BECKWORTH: I have our letter of June 27 inquiring about the advisability of acreage allotments of less than 3 acres. In my opinion, regardless of the type of land and the type of farming operation involved, no farmer could afford to include cotton in his diversification program and plant less than a minimum of 5 acres. I base this statement on farm-management courses studied in college and on my experience in owning and operating farms.

In my opinion, your personal information gathered as a young man in east Texas would be sufficient on which to base your judgment. I believe you understand the small farmers' problem as well as any other Member of Congress.

Please call on me at any time that I may be of service to you.

Sincerely,

CHARLIE S. WILKINS,

DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiry of June 7, 1950, I would say that the very least number of acres of upland cotton a farmer could afford to grow economically in our State would be 10 acres. This could be made economical only on a highly diversified plan, in which the farmer expected to realize not more than one-fifth of his total farm income from cotton.

Sincerely yours,

E. E. GRAHAM.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of May 12, 1950, relative to acreage required where a family of a man, wife, and three or four children depend on cotton as their primary money crop.

In my opinion, through observations, the minimum would be eight acres per family of this size.

Yours very truly,

MARTIN D. HURST,
Chairman, Leon County PMA Committee.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FARMERS HOME ADMINISTRATION,
Atlanta, Ga., June 1, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: Your communication of May 15, 1950, addressed to the State Director of Farmers Home Administration for Georgia regarding cotton acreage was received on May 25. You asked for our opinion as to the minimum number of acres of cotton a man, wife, and three or four children should have in order to make a living where cotton is the primary money crop.

In order to arrive at a figure which may represent an average, we will have to consider many factors. In the first place, in financing farmers under our program we consider the land resources of the individual operator, its adaptability to cotton production, family resources and the ability of the family to produce cotton under boll-weevil conditions. We also have to consider the county average yield. In some counties in Georgia where cotton has previously been the major cash crop, we now recommend planting less than one-half of acres formerly planted to cotton. In counties where yields under good farming methods are less than 400 pounds of lint we discourage cotton production except a small acreage during the transition period to other cash enterprises. Generally speaking, farmers in the northern half of the State are getting away from cotton as a primary cash crop.

In our opinion, a Georgia farm family of the size referred to above should have as a minimum a gross cash income of $1,500 plus adequate subsistence crops in order to enjoy a fair standard of living. Based on present price levels and average yields which are less than 400 pounds of lint in many counties, you can readily see that it would require from 15 to 17 acres of cotton in areas where cotton is the primary crop.

In our program we are recommending a more diversified type of farming which calls for less cotton acreage with better cultural practices and more livestock and livestock products.

The above comments are largely related to our program in Georgia and may not reflect the thinking of all the agricultural leaders in the State.

Sincerely yours,

R. L. VANSANT,
State Director.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FARMERS HOME ADMINISTRATION,
Atlanta, Ga., June 28, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: We have your communication of June 7, 1950, in which you ask our opinion as to the least number of acres of upland cotton a farmer can afford to grow or economically grow in Georgia.

Our letter of June 6 on a similar subject reflects our thinking as to the number of acres of cotton a family-type operator should have where cotton is the primary cash crop. The question in your last communication is more difficult to answer for the reason that you refer to farmers in general and not a special group. We have a number of farmers in Georgia who cultivate and harvest their cotton crops with mechanized equipment. This type of operator can utilize more cotton acreage than a farmer with less facilities.

After considering the above and all the factors outlined in our letter of June 6 and based on our observations, it is our opinion that the average cotton producer whose major cash income is derived from cotton needs from 15 to 20 acres in cotton. We have not taken into consideration a few large operators who use all mechanized equipment and employ hired labor and share croppers.

Should additional information regarding this subject be desired, we shall be glad to furnish it upon request.

Sincerely yours,

S. L. VANLANDINGHAM,
Acting State Director.

Representative LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
Congress of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your request of May 25 addressed to the president of the University of Georgia for information on the minimum number of acres in cotton needed to make a living has been referred to me.

I am enclosing copies of two reports containing information bearing on your question, one of which is Project I Agricultural Adjustments Toward an Efficient Agriculture in the South, a statement presented to Special House subcommittee on cotton on July 7 and 8, 1947. Table 5 of this report shows estimates of acreages needed in various subregions of the South. You will note from the other publication (see p. 28), Farm Adjustment Opportunities in Greene County, Ga., that we do have many families making a living on 30 acres or less of cultivated land. This obviously may not be a very satisfactory living.

I hope that this information will be helpful to you.

Sincerely yours,

W. E. HENDRIX,
Agricultural Economist.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Atlanta, Ga., May 26, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BECKWORTH: I am in receipt of copy of your general letter in which you asked the question, "What is the minimum number of acreage in cotton a family of man and wife and three or four children require when depending on cotton as their primary money crop?"

Naturally, this is a difficult question to attempt to answer as there are so many factors involved—type of soil, ability of the farmer to produce, and many other things. I would rather think of the question not in number of acres needed, but the production necessary to give this family a reasonable cash income. Certainly not less than 8 to 10 bales of cotton are necessary for such a family when depending on cotton as their main source of income.

As a matter of fact, I am definitely of the opinion that that type of farmer should not be restricted at all, but given the opportunity of producing all he can, with a minimum guaranteed price announced at the beginning of the year for a certain portion of his production, based on the amount of cotton that is to be consumed domestically.

I am mailing you, under separate cover, a mimeographed copy of my editorials that appeared in the Market Bulletin last November and December in which I have attempted to analyze the permanent farm plan that has been approved by the southern commissioners of agriculture. I hope you will have the opportunity of reviewing this plan, as we think it is the only logical and reasonable farm program that has been proposed so far.

With kindest regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

GEORGIA STATE OFFICE,
Athens, Ga., May 16, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: This will acknowledge your letter of May 12 requesting observations or information in regard to the minimum number of acres of cotton per family.

We would like to state at the outset that your question is very broad, and the assumption much too general to allow for a definite answer. Since the agricultural picture in the Southeast has changed so radically in the past 7 years, and we have tended to lose sight of actual cotton farm conditions because of our loss of contact with the cotton farmer, we are not at all certain that the "family cotton crop" is the basis for the production of this commodity as it was 10 years ago. There are undoubtedly still a large number of "family crops" of cotton still being produced, however, there are certain indications that the relative number of people producing cotton on this basis has substantially lessened. A great deal of the production of these units has been taken over by subsistence farmers; the increasing numbers of farmers operating with motorized equipment; and those persons producing cotton to maintain labor for other crops and farm products.

For your information and study, we are enclosing a tabulation for Georgia showing by counties the number of cotton acreage allotments in various acreage ranges. These acreage ranges refer to the cotton acreage allotments established for farms, and the tabulation was prepared subsequent to the establishment of "new grower" cotton allotments, but before putting into effect of Public Law 471.

Another point in your question that prevents a direct answer is the lack of a definition of what would constitute a "living for the family." The constant pressure to improve social and economic conditions has caused an elevation which probably is approaching the limit of the physical capacity of the family unit to produce cotton sufficient enough to provide them with the means for reaching the levels toward which they are being educated.

We dislike having to evade your question but it is not felt that an adequate answer could be made based on conditions that were predominant in the past and the existence of which are not positive at this time.

If it will be of any assistance to you in the formulation of your idea in this matter, we are outlining below a few of the accepted costs and value estimates regarding cotton in this area. The various cost figures are for the actual cost of the items and do not include any incidental cost connected with the business of farming.

Cost of:

Seed	per acre	$3
Fertilizer	do	10
Insect control	do	10
Ginning	per bale	8
Picking	per hundred	3

Gross value of cotton and cottonseed per acre: 1948, $106.50; 1949, $64.

Very truly yours,

T. R. BREEDLOVE,
Chairman, State PMA Committee.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BECKWORTH: This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of the twelfth making inquiry as to what, in my opinion, is the minimum number of acres planted to cotton necessary for a family of from 5 to 6 to make a living on from the production of cotton in the average upland cotton area of the South.

I feel that a minimum of 25 acres are necessary for a family this size to make a reasonable living.

Sincerely yours,

W. E. ANDERSON, Commissioner.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BECKWORTH: Your letter of May 12 to Mr. L. A. Mullin, chairman, State PMA committee was referred to me for further attention. There are many variables in the problem with which your question is concerned, such as the ages of the children, the normal yield of cotton, the price of cotton, and other farm enterprises in addition to cotton.

After discussing the matter with Mr. Felix Stanley, our farm management specialist, we would say that the average upland cotton farmer who depends primarily on cotton for cash income should have 30 acres of cotton and 30 acres of other cropland as a minimum in order to make a living for his family above out-of-pocket costs of operation. This conclusion is based on an assumed average cotton yield per acre of 250 pounds and a market price of 30 cents per pound.

Summary

Estimated cash income	$2,400
Estimated expenses for labor, mule work, picking, machinery, materials and services	1,057
Farm income	1,343
Less interest on investment	300
Labor income	1,043

If the farmer should own all the capital involved, he would of course return for himself the interest earnings.

Kindly write me if you have need for further information.

Sincerely yours,

B. M. GILE,
Head, Department of Agricultural Economics.

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI,

Jackson, May 18, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: We have your letter of May 13 with reference to cotton acreage.

In the old days when most cotton was produced on the small farm by mule power it was believed that from 15 to 20 acres was all of the cotton which could be properly planted, cultivated and harvested by the average small family. This same situation would exist today in the hill section with the poorer class of farmer. On the other hand if the farmer has a tractor and other machinery and if he employs day labor during peak seasons, this acreage could easily be doubled or tripled.

The amount of cotton acreage would also depend on the amount of time consumed on other crops, livestock, poultry, dairying and so forth.

I believe you will understand from the above many factors enter into acreage and production. I would say that 20 acres is still not a bad estimate, but I would further say that the average family with little means, doing its own work, can live, but would make a bare existence if it depends on cotton production.

Very truly yours,

ALLAN MCCLUER,
Chief Inspector.

Mr. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: We have your recent letter with reference to the minimum acreage of upland cotton in this State.

I would say that many of the most progressive small farmers in upland counties grow no cotton at all. The minimum acreage would depend entirely on other pursuits which were carried on at the same time. If a farmer depended on cotton alone I would say a 10 acre minimum. If, on the other hand, he produced hay, grains, hogs, beef cattle, dairy products, vegetables, poultry, and the many other pursuits which are open to him, he would probably be better off with 2 or 3 acres or no cotton at all.

Very truly yours,

ALLAN MCCLUER,

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BECKWORTH: Your letter of May 25 addressed to the President has been referred to me for reply.

It appears that no categorical answer can be given, good for all times and places, on any definition of "a living for the family." It depends on the price of cotton and cottonseed, or rather their buying power, their relative price; and on yields per acre, which vary greatly not only as between areas but also from farm to farm within most areas. It also depends on what else can be advantageously produced—on what combination of farm enterprises, in a given locality with its marketing opportunities and its natural advantages, will accomplish the best use of all resources, including labor especially, so as to bring the largest net returns from the whole enterprise. And such matters as soil conservation must also be considered. The adaptation of the land, because of topography, to the use of farm machinery is another variable factor, influencing the potentialities.

We enclose two publications which we suggest you look over, along with two maps which you can obtain from Mr. Ralph R. Botts, Principal Agricultural Economist, Division of Agricultural Finance, BAE: "County Average Yield of Cotton for Period 1939–46" and "Coefficient of Variation in County Average Yield."

Unless, by use of the new insecticides, the boll weevil is controlled, not all the cotton acreage that a family can cultivate in hill areas of the lower South, east of the Texas high plains, will make a decent American living for the average producer or the below-average producer; unless, indeed, economical fully mechanized cultivation and picking become practical in those areas—and it can hardly be said that this is now in sight.

The farm family of a man, wife, and three children, no matter how large the farm and even without legal limitation on acreage, is not likely to undertake, or be able, to cultivate more than 10 acres of cotton—maybe 12 sometimes. The average in scores and hundreds of counties is below 250 pounds per acre, county-wide average; and half the cotton land makes less, of course. In a large number of counties it is below 200 pounds. Four or five bales, therefore, is average, per farm family of the size mentioned, when cotton is the main cash crop. Such a family cannot carry on much else but cotton farming, because of the high labor requirement in the two peak periods. At present prices, the gross sales from the farm is, therefore, likely to be less than $1,000; and the net only a fraction of that, because costs are, with low yields, a relatively large part of the gross.

In other hill areas there are a relatively few counties that have an average of 350 or even 400 pounds per acre; and there are some farmers in most counties in the Cotton Belt that average as well or better.

Without stating this as an official view of the college, I may say that many of us believe that where yields are below 250 pounds, at least, on an average, more farmers still should go out of cotton production; because there is little if any profit—unless the yields can be raised.

In any case, in most hill areas especially but in the Delta also, we do not believe it most profitable for a family to cultivate all the cotton possible; rather, it is advisable to select the cotton land, and to organize the farm enterprises for diversified production.

If such a family grows cotton, perhaps six or seven acres of cotton, together with 8 to 12 dairy cows where dairying can be carried on, with some other production, would be advisable; and a minimum size for the farm might be 50 or 60 acres of reasonably good open crop and pasture land. A family might make a minimum standard of income on such a farm. If beef cattle, then a larger farm is needed. And we, in fact, see the family farm of the future (except for specialized poultry and the like) to be from 80 to 150 open acres, up to 250 acres, in average hill areas.

In sum, we do not see how it is practicable for an average family, with cotton as the almost sole money product, to make a living that is acceptable, outside areas like the high plains, unless economical fully mechanized operations become practical—in which case the family farm would be much larger.

We may say, Congressman, that we know now of many hill farms that are making a living and some of them include cotton; but we need field studies of these family farms in the hills—and need funds in order to make these studies.

These statements are as precise as we feel we can make. If there is anything else you wish of us, please advise us.

Very truly,

H. P. TODD,
Assistant Agricultural Economist.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA,
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Raleigh, May 19, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: This acknowledges your letter of May 12, 1950, requesting my opinion as to the minimum number of acres of cotton necessary to produce a living for a family of five or six, a man, his wife, and three or four children. This is a rather difficult question to answer since it would depend on a number of factors such as the age of the children, productiveness of the soil, and the standard of living, and whether or not it was an independent operation in which all of the work had to be done by hand, or whether or not it would be a part of a large operation in which more mechanical devices would be used.

On an independently operated farm in North Carolina where cotton is the primary money crop, I would say that a man, his wife, and three or four small children could handle only about 5 or 6 acres. This, of course, would produce a very meager income for a family of that size. In cases where the children are large enough to work, the family could handle considerably more acres, say up to 12 or 15 or more.

It is hard to discuss the acreage needed without determining the amount of acres that the family could harvest. At any rate, I would not suggest that a family of a man, his wife, and three or four children, small, should have less than 5 or 6 acres of cotton. Even then, the family would need considerable supplementary income from other phases of his farming program. The above suggested acreage is predicated on a production of not less than 400 to 500 pounds of lint cotton per acre.

Very truly yours,

L. Y. BALLENTINE.

Representative LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE BECKWORTH: In response to your inquiry of May 25 addressed to Chancelor Harrelson, I would like to make the following comments:

1. It is difficult to answer your question unless it is framed in a given set of circumstances.

2. I do not believe a small farm family can grow enough cotton using conventional or workstock methods of production to afford the kind of standard of living which is usually recommended. To attain an acceptable standard of living, it would be necessary to produce a good many things in addition to cotton.

3. The maximum acreage which a family of four or five can handle in cotton under present workstock methods of production is approximately 10. If this is the primary source of income, it would not afford a very high standard of living unless the price was extremely high.

4. I am enclosing a bulletin entitled "Opportunities for Adjustments in Farming Systems Southern Piedmont Area, North Carolina" which will give you additional information on this subject.

If I can be of additional assistance, please let me know.

Very truly yours,

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,

Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: In reply to your inquiry as to the minimum acres of upland cotton a farmer can afford to grow or economically grow in Oklahoma, we advise you that, generally speaking, we believe from 12 to 15 acres is the very least such a farmer can afford to grow and that would be as a cash crop in conjunction with other enterprises. Our experience indicates that where cotton farmers have too little of their major crop, there is a tendency for failure.

Sincerely,

E. LEE OZBIRN,

SIR: In response to your letter of May 25 I wish to say that a lot of things would enter into one's estimate as to the number of acres of cotton a family of five or six would need in order to make a living. The type of land, rainfall, and the price of cotton would all enter into the picture. It is my honest opinion that a person would need a minimum of 50 acres of average Texas land planted to cotton each year in order to have anything like an average standard of living.

I would like to point out this is just an estimate. From my observations while living in the cotton area, it is my belief that the average family does not have adequate living conditions, comparable to those of families producing other agricultural products.

Yours very truly,

MARVIN MCKEE, President.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
Stillwater, Okla.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In the average upland cotton area of the South where a family of a man, wife, and three or four children depend on cotton as their primary money crop, in your judgment, what is the minimum number of acres in cotton this kind of family needs in order to make a living for the family?

Any observations or information you may give me in this connection will be appreciated.

Sincerely,

LINDLEY BECKWORTH.

(Answer:) 30 acres of cotton; 50 acres of feed crops; 30 acres of pasture; about 5 cows, 2 sows, 50 hens, and desirable number of good roosters. Of course presuming that he has four good work horses or a tractor with other necessary implements to go with them.

With the above he may come out even.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FARMERS HOME ADMINISTRATION,
Columbia, S. C., July 11, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: Present cotton-growing requirements, especially insect-control equipment, make it necessary for the average grower to have five or more acres in cotton if he is to follow a well-balanced farming program.

On our opinion, a cotton allotment in excess of 5 acres lends itself admirably to proper diversification and good farming practices until it reaches a point of occupying one-third of the cultivated acres on the farm.

Sincerely yours,

R. F. KOLB, State Director.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FARMERS HOME ADMINISTRATION,
Columbia, S. C., May 18, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: Our State average cotton yield for the past 10 years (1941–49, inclusive) is 306 pounds of lint. The average price per pound over a like period is approximately 21 cents, resulting in about $600 income from 10 acres of cotton.

Based on these figures and the labor requirements in this section, it is our belief that a minimum of 10 acres of cotton when properly balanced with other farm enterprises will be required to support a family of five or six on a fairly satisfactory living standard.

Sincerely yours,

R. F. KOLB,
State Director.

STATE OF TEXAS,
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Austin, June 12, 1950.

Congressman LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR LINDLEY: Absence from the office and a desk piled high with correspondence account for the delay in answering your two letters.

In one you ask, "In the average upland cotton area of the South where a family of a man, wife and three or four children, depend on cotton as their primary money crop, in your opinion what is the minimum number of acres in cotton this kind of family needs in order to make a living for the family?"

Lindley, you asked the $64 question. Acres do not mean production since climatic conditions enter the picture. Therefore, no farm program which makes allotments in acres will ever succeed. The allotments must be in units such as bales, bushels, or pounds, based on acreage and soil fertility.

Since we have small farmers, medium sized farmers, and large farmers, all of whom have equal rights as citizens and pay taxes in proportion to the property they own, it is very evident that any farm program which will be constructive and enduring must allot to each farmer—according to the acreage and fertility of the soil—his fair share in the American market, allotments to be made in units upon which he must receive full parity price.

Regardless of whether he be a small, medium, or large farmer, he must be permitted to use his own judgment as to whether or not he will produce in excess of his domestic allotment for sale in foreign markets at world market prices. No democratic government can discriminate for or against citizens just because they have more or less of this world's goods. When a farmer is given his fair share in the American market, according to his acreage and the soil fertility, that is as far as the Government can go. Some think that there should be a family exemption up to so many bushels, bales, or pounds, but that would bring such complexities that it would not work.

Wishing you everything good, I am,

Sincerely yours,

J. E. MCDONALD,
Commissioner.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana such time as he may desire.

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Chairman, coming from one of the largest cotton producing districts in Louisiana, and my own parish, being off and on, one of the largest cotton-producing parishes in Louisiana, I feel that the amendment by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH] has considerable merit and is worthy of consideration.

I think that the system under which we operate in the State of Louisiana, with a large percentage of our cotton farmers being sharecroppers, and since many of the families, both white and Negro grow cotton on the same farms, reducing the amount of acreage allowed to any one farmer or family has resulted in disorganizing and causing hardship to these small cotton farmers, and especially since no family can exist on less than 5 acres of cotton when the farms have been reduced to a point where there is less than 5 acres of cotton to be planted, the landowner has no other alternative than to let the tenant or sharecropper off and out of the farm, and these poor, small farmers have no other place to go to raise cotton as all of the others use the acreage allotted to them, and unless they are able to find some other employment, they become a public charge. This has resulted in affecting the economy of our section, and many families who have been planting small cotton acreage all of their lives are frustrated and homeless.

Mr. Chairman, I could place in the record hundreds of letters which I have received from my constituents, but I will only ask permission to place in the RECORD two sample letters which I think show the situation in regard to the 5-acre farmers, as follows:

EUNICE, LA., March 13, 1950.

PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIRS: I am a farmer, a veteran of the recent war, living in Evangeline Parish, and am having difficulty getting enough cotton acreage to make a living.

It is my understanding, that a farmer is allotted at least 5 acres under the cotton-quota system. I have been allotted but 3½ acres of cotton to plant this year. This is not enough to make a living for me and my family. I have appealed several times to the parish PMA office to let me plant at least 5 acres, but have had no results. With such a small allotment, I will have difficulty supporting my wife and three children.

I would appreciate any help or consideration on this matter, and receive it in time that I may plant my crop.

Yours truly,

WILSON SOILEAU.

ST. LANDRY PARISH
YOUNG FARMERS ORGANIZATION,
Opelousas, La., May 8, 1950.

HON. HENRY D. LARCADE,
Congressman of Louisiana,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LARCADE: We, the undersigned committee, were authorized by the executive committee to represent the St. Landry Parish Young Farmers Organization, which is composed of some 400 or more young farmers, in the matter explained below.

We, as representatives of this organization, wish to appeal to you as our lawmakers, and ask that you look into the cotton acreage quota law and see if it cannot be amended in a manner that it will equalize the cotton acreages given to tenant and sharecropper farmers. As the law stands, the cotton-acreage quota is based on a per-farm basis and not on a per-family-unit basis. This will force some of the landowners to reduce the number of tenants on their farms, thereby forcing these same tenants to leave the farm; and in society they will fit nowhere.

This law as it presently stands has a ruling that no farm can get a smaller quota than 5 acres, unless there was less cotton planted on the farm the previous 3 years. We have no complaints against the amount if the man concerned is a landowner. However, if it takes 5 acres' production to balance a family's farming system and that family is a one-half share cropper, this same family will actually receive in labor inome the proceeds of 2½ acres of production, which is not enough. The landowner will get by, on the other hand, by cutting down the number of families on his farm. When this takes place, however, you will have displaced about one-fifth of the tenants on a farm. It will not be possible for them to go to another farm, because all landowners are faced with the same problem.

These tenants have in most cases been farming all their lives, therefore, are not qualified for any other occupation. When they leave the farm they will become social misfits, not by their own choice but for reasons beyond their control.

Hoping we have made our point clear and that you look into this matter, we remain,

Sincerely yours,

NICK DUBUISSON, Chairman.
GEORGE BULLER.
JOSEPH HAROLD RICHARD.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr Chairman, this is just an enlargement upon the amendment which was defeated a little while ago. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH], sought first to provide 5 acres as an allotment for every veteran of World War II who could satisfy a local committee that he was in good faith a farmer and desired to plant cotton.

The effect of this amendment is even more gracious on his part and he is a little more generous, because he now wants to give to every Tom, Dick, and Harry, man, woman, and child, a 5-acre minimum acreage allotment. The effect of his amendment would be to destroy the cotton-control program entirely. I think that anybody who knows anything at all about the amendment knows that that would be its effect were it to be adopted.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. POAGE. Is it not true that 40 percent of the farms of the United States now have a cotton allotment of 5 acres or less?

Mr. COOLEY. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. POAGE. That would mean that 40 percent of the cotton farmers could not save anything in the way of acreage.

Mr. COOLEY. In my own State of North Carolina over 50 percent of the farmers have less than 5 acres in cotton. This would mean that 50 percent of the farmers in my State could not contribute anything to this acreage-reduction program.

Mr. Chairman, without further delay, I do want to insist that this is an important amendment and it would be very disastrous to the cotton program if adopted. I hope the membership of the House will vote the amendment down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PACE. The committee has two amendments at the desk. I should like to be advised when they are reached.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the understanding of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole that the pending amendment to section 2 is the amendment now at the Clerk's desk offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON]. The gentleman from Georgia has two amendments which concern section 3 and section 9 of the bill.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MASON. Under the rules of the House how long can the Committee of the Whole continue a free-for-all among the cotton growers and particularly the Texas cotton growers?

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole will continue in session until a motion to rise is adopted.

The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAHON: Page 10, after line 16, strike out paragraph 4 down to and including all of line 3 on page 11.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I prepared this amendment as a companion amendment to the amendment which I offered earlier this afternoon and which was not adopted. I wish to keep the RECORD straight and insist that the position presented by these two amendments is correct and sound.

The arguments which I urged in seeking to strike out the language on page 3 that applied only to Texas apply in the same manner to the pending amendment. It is not necessary to repeat those arguments. All the talk in the world cannot erase the fact that the pending bill deprives the State of Texas of operating under the general terms of the law as is the case with every other State in the Union.

May I take a moment to say that on the final vote I shall vote against the pending bill. Let me say further that if the pending bill becomes the law I predict that there will be widespread dissatisfaction throughout all parts of Texas. Those who ardently defend the pending bill seem not to realize that if the pending bill becomes the law the farmers in 11 of the 21 congressional districts in Texas will get a smaller cotton acreage allotment in 1951 than they received in 1950. I am speaking of congressional districts and not of individual counties and individual farmers. This unsatisfactory condition will be partially brought about by the fact that the House Committee on Agriculture has failed to reenact Public Law 471 of the present Congress which gave emergency relief to many cotton producers throughout the State. I had hoped that the 1950 program would be improved and that the 1951 program would be better than the 1950 program. The pending bill, while it contains some helpful provisions, is so hopelessly inadequate it is unacceptable.

The following statement has been prepared by the Production and Marketing Administration in regard to the controversy over whether or not Texas allotments in 1950 should have been made on a 2-year base period or on a 4-year base period.

Officials of the Department have been repeatedly attacked on the floor. I personally have found officials in the Department to be gentlemen of high character who have cooperated in a very fine way. Since I am not aware of all the facts and circumstances I have requested the Department to supply me with a statement on the attitude of the Department in regard to the controversy. I expect to get unanimous consent to insert that statement in the RECORD at this point.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. GEORGE MAHON,
Member of Congress.

DEAR MR. MAHON: In reply to your request for a statement from this office regarding certain charges concerning the determination of 1950 cotton acreage allotments for the State of Texas and the counties therein the following informationg is supplied.

RALPH S. TRIGG,
Administrator, PMA.

This statement deals with the matter of apportioning cotton acreage allotments to the State of Texas and the counties therein and the charge that officials of the Department of Agriculture made a mistake that was intended to be made in order to make the allotments work out in the State of Texas in the manner which it did. It was stated in effect, if not in fact, that officials of the Department of Agriculture had intentionally miscalculated acreage in applying the formula set forth in the law for apportioning State and county cotton acreage allotments in Texas with the intention of forcing the State acreage allotment in Texas to be computed on the basis of the years 1947 and 1948 rather than the 4 years 1945, 1946, 1947, and 1948.

I want to review for your information some of the basic steps and basic facts which served as a fundamental basis for the cotton allotment legislation which Congress passed in 1949 and which is before Congress at this time for amendment. On April 24 and April 25, 1949, a meeting was held in Memphis, Tenn., generally known as the Belt-wide conference, at which time various representatives from the cotton-producing States met for the purpose of formulating basic recommendations with respect to apportioning cotton-acreage allotments for future programs. It is an established fact that this group came forth with a number of recommendations, the principal one of which consisted of a formula for apportioning the national cotton-acreage allotment to States and State acreage allotments to counties. The statement was made that representatives of the Department of Agriculture had advised the committee that that portion of the Memphis agreement dealing with establishment of a State acreage allotment based on the planting from 1947 and 1948 instead of plantings during the 4-year period 1945 to 1948 would not apply to the State of Texas and that it did not do so until the original acreage figures were changed. It is largely with respect to this statement that I direct your attention. I submit that the exact contrary is the fact with reference to the statement that the Department of Agriculture advised the committee that this gadget would not apply to the State of Texas.

I submit for the record a copy of table No. 2 which was formulated and adopted at the Memphis meeting and which today is the basic formula in the cotton acreage allotment law. I refer you to the fifth column of this table and direct your attention within this column opposite the name Texas showing an adjustment for the State for the purpose of carrying out the 1947–48 protective provision of the agreement. This is further identified by the note at the bottom of the table. A copy of this same table can be found in the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, United States Senate, dated June 14, 15, 22, 27, 1949, regarding S. 1962, which was the basic bill embodying the principle worked out at the Belt-wide conference in Memphis, I submit also a copy of a table relating to this same matter worked out by the Department and made available to the Cotton Subcommittee of the House dealing with this same subject, both of which point to the probability that the State of Texas would receive the protection of the special provisions relating to 1947 and 1948. The reason I use the word "probability" was the fact that at the time the committees were considering this legislation and the Department made application of the various formulas being considered, the amount of war-crop credits which would be used with respect to each State was undetermined and was not available to the Department or anyone else for several weeks after the law was enacted. No representative of the Department, not even once, ever gave any member of the House Agriculture Committee the assurance that the State cotton acreage allotment would work out in any specific manner. Proof of this is the fact that no one in the Department could have, at the time this legislation was being considered, known what the exact final answer was going to be. However, all the determinations made and submitted to the committees with respect to the application of the basic formula up to the time the Public Law 272 was finally enacted, pointed very clearly to the probability that Texas might be one of the States protected by the so-called gadget provision as relates to 1947 and 1948.

In applying the law to the best available statistics the calculations gave Texas its allotment on the basis of 95 percent of the cotton grown in 1947 and 1948. When this fact became known the Department was accused of misinterpreting the provisions of the law. A case was filed in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia concerning this matter and on March 27, 1950, the court ruled that the law had been properly applied by the Department. This approach having failed, an attempt was made to shift responsibility for the way the law worked to the Department. The Department was then accused of deliberately miscalculating the figures.

Since cotton acreages had not been measured since 1942, the Department used the best available statistics, which were the official figures of the Crop Reporting Board of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. The basic factor which the Board uses in estimating acreages of cotton during years when there are no measurements are the bales of cotton produced as supplied to the Bureau of the Census by cotton ginners. In the fall of 1949 the Census Bureau reported the sum of 3,210 bales of cotton which was ginned by three gins in the State of Texas which had not been previously reported. As is done in all such instances by the BAE when such facts are brought forth conclusively, adjustments were made in the basic statistics. Also, some adjustments were made in the State acreage statistics in the fall of 1949 for Georgia. This situation was not something new or unusual.

The Crop Reporting Board follows an established policy and program in preparing cotton acreage and production estimates. This program is as follows:

1. The first acreage estimate for the season is made as of July 1 and relates to cotton acreage in cultivation as of that date.

2. The first production forecast is made as of August 1, and subsequent production forecasts are made as of the first of the months of September, October, November, and December.

3. The first estimate of acreage for harvest for the current year is made as of September 1 each year.

4. It is required by law to estimate ginnings; therefore, it is not possible to release estimates of production for any year until early May following the year of production. At that time the Bureau of the Census has final reports on ginnings.

5. When the results of each quinquennial census of agriculture becomes available the Crop Reporting Board reviews the acreage and production estimates prepared since the previous quinquennial census.

6. Revisions are made in the estimates for previous years at other times during the season when conclusive evidence becomes available.

During the past year, questions were raised with respect to the acreage determination in a number of States, among which was Texas, where county committes presented evidence of additional ginnings which had not been included in the census records. A similar situation developed in Georgia for the years 1947 and 1948 where new gins were located which had not reported their ginnings to the Bureau of the Census. These additional ginnings, not previously reported, were verified and accepted by the Bureau of the Census. Whenever this situation arises the additional ginnings are not considered official until fully verified by the Bureau of the Census. The discovery of these omissions necessitated the revision of acreage estimates in the two States concerned. A complete background information on the Texas situation was provided Mr. POAGE in a letter dated February 24, 1950, by Mr. C. E. Burkhead, head, Division of Field Crop Statistics, and also another statement by him dated February 10, 1950.

Because of the uses BAE cotton acreage estimates were put in the fall of 1949 and early 1950 the Crop Reporting Board made a thorough analysis of the data for the years 1944 through 1948, by counties, and on a State and National basis. While a minimum number of changes were finally required in the State estimates a number of changes, both upward and downward, were made in the county estimates, primarily based on the PMA 532–c data and total quantity grown reported by the Bureau of the Census. Therefore, for all practical purposes the actual production for each county is known.

While the Board gave considerable study to the estimates for a period of years in the fall of 1949 the procedure was not unusual. The primary purpose of the review was to arrive at the most accurate estimates possible based on all available information. In the final analysis comparatively few changes were required. A record of these changes is included on page 7 of House Report 1509.

A memorandum dated January 19, 1950, was given to Mr. Joseph C. Parker, counsel for the House Committee on Agriculture, from Mr. S. R. Newell, Assistant Chief of BAE, and Chairman of the Crop Reporting Board, setting forth in more detail the policy followed in reviewing and revising the cotton estimates in the course of the 1950 cotton acreage allotment program. Copies of this material are available for anyone interested in further studying the facts. The Department carried out the law in accordance with the facts.

[1] Public Law 12 adjustment included on ratio basis.
[2] Reduction in no State more than 5 percent of 1947–48 average acreage or 15 percent under 1948 plantings.

Prepared for Mr. Joseph O. Parker, clerk, House of Representatives, Committee on Agriculture, about May 26, 1949.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, without trying to impose upon your time, I want to call attention to what this amendment would do if it were passed. You will recall that the gentleman from the Nineteenth District of Texas sought a short time ago to change this bill in order to enable his district to perpetuate a special gadget or formula under which his district will receive substantial benefits this year. The committee was of the opinion that we should place Texas as most of the States of the Union, under a general formula that would apply to all alike, to his district and to all others alike. The committee rejected the gentleman's amendment.

His district for this year had the benefit of 355,000 acres of cotton that in the absence of the special gadget would have gone to 17 other districts in Texas. That there was no animus on the part of those of us who sought to have the general formula apply in Texas is evidenced by the proviso that the gentleman now seeks to strike out. That provision provides that any county in the State of Texas may in the coming years count for their history either the cotton that was actually planted in 1950 or the amount that they would have had had Texas not operated under a special gadget in 1950.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. Is it not true that under the regular law, if my amendment is adopted, my district would get the credit for its plantings in 1950, the 2-year basis. That is the reason why I offered the amendment.

Mr. POAGE. No; other States will not share on the 2-year basis. Only those that are under a special gadget and that have shown some reason why they should be under a special gadget will operate under the formula that the gentleman proposes. As a matter of fact, if this amendment is adopted the Nineteenth District of Texas and three other districts will receive history credit for cotton to which they were not entitled and they will perpetuate it on down through the years in their history. We are not objecting to that. We are letting them keep that history. This amendment would however say to those districts that were denied their fair share of the Texas allotment in 1950 that you can never get your history back. Remember this history we are talking about only relates to the division or acreage within the State of Texas and does not add anything to the national allotment or the State allotments. Those of you who come from other States need not fear. We are asking that in the future Texas cotton be divided on the basis of history as between the counties of Texas as if those who were denied this half million acres this year had received it. We are not trying to take from the gentleman the history that he built up this year, even though he built it up under a misapprehension of facts. We are simply saying those districts who lost this year will have the benefit of coming in on equal terms with those districts that got the advantage this year. His district got a cotton allotment this year to which it was not entitled. He is going to have a history next year as the result of that, although it was a mistake. Now, then, he comes along and tries to deny to those of us who were denied the full right to grow a full crop this year even the right to grow cotton in the future. It seems to me to be grossly unfair. I am sure that the membership of this House will want those districts in Texas that contributed so generously to the tremendous crop grown in the Nineteenth District to have a history comparable to what they would have had had he not found this extra cotton on his doorstep.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PACE: Page 13, line 15, after "(e)", strike out the comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. POAGE: Page 16, line 13, strike out section 6 in its entirety.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment strikes out section 6 in its entirety. Section 6 is the section which relates to the changing of the allocation of the wheat acreage. It was felt necessary to put this provision in here earlier in the session because of the hardship that apparently would be worked on certain Western States were it not placed in the bill. In recent weeks the allotment of acreage for wheat has been determined by the Department and is substantially greater than had originally been supposed would be possible. This makes it possible for the Department of Agriculture, through the operation of the formula that is now in effect, to give to the States that had expected to suffer an unconscionable cut a percentage of wheat acreage which we understand is satisfactory to all of them. I think it can be fairly stated that the Representatives from both the western and eastern sections are in agreement that this section should now come out and that the Department should allocate wheat on the basis of the letter which I placed in the RECORD last Thursday on page 11278 in which the Department explains the method whereby wheat will be allocated. That method of allocation will give to the States that had expected an unconscionable cut a reasonable amount of wheat. They, therefore, proposed to strike out the entire section and to operate on the basis as outlined in the Department letter. We believe it will work substantial justice to all sections of the country without increasing by 1 acre the wheat allotment, and I think everybody was anxious to achieve that result. I am authorized to offer this amendment on behalf of the committee.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to detain the Committee for the full 5 minutes, but I should like to ask a question or two so that we can clarify the idea expressed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE], to which, of course, I am not going to object. If I understand this correctly, my own State of Colorado, since they have increased the wheat-acreage allotments from 72,719,000 to 72,784,810 acres for this year, would for this year, the 1951 crop, or the 1950 acres, be allotted 2,856,632 acres less, or 96.1 percent of our acreage for 1949. I am sure we will make no objection if that is the case.

Mr. POAGE. Yes; because the statement of the Department to the subcommittee, and their letter, which is in the RECORD of last Thursday, states that they will carry out the allocation upon that basis. I have before me now their statement, which gives the figures in each State, and those are the correct figures as given to the subcommittee by the Department of Agriculture. They state in their letter that they will act on that basis.

Mr. HILL. One more question. That would answer my objection. Take a county which had an increase of over 100,000 under gadget 272, that county then would not be cut under the application of this formula more than 4.9 percent. This would follow the average curtailment of the wheat acres in the State. Is that correct?

Mr. POAGE. If it had the State average, that would be true. I cannot give the gentleman assurance that every county in the State will get the same treatment, but I understand that the formula will enable his State committee so to handle his State acreage that there will be only a 3.9 cut within his State.

Mr. HILL. That would be even better than the figures I just mentioned?

Mr. POAGE. That is correct.

Mr. HILL. I think I should state in all fairness to everyone that I cannot help but feel that the Department has the intention and every idea of carrying out this wheat allocation or allotment to the States in the manner the gentleman has mentioned. Therefore, I think we can accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE].

Further, Mr. Chairman, it does seem that a factor which we must consider in this matter is that as long as this wheat amendment or section of the cotton bill is being considered by the legislative branch of our Government, it would be impossible for the Department of Agriculture to fix the acreage allotments in the various States and also be impossible for the State committees to assign county allotments. Since August is here and wheat farmers are anxious to know the wheat acreage they can plant this fall, and whereas this bill might be delayed in the Senate for some time, I feel that with the definite promise of the Department of Agriculture to carry out the wheat allotment as proposed by charts and maps presented to our Committee on Agriculture, we should accept the amendment and strike this section from this bill.

Last year this House passed Public Law 272, which protected the wheat farmers of several Western States, including Colorado, and permitted them to hold the wheat acreage for the 1950 crop.

Under this gadget as provided by Public Law 272 the testimony by experts from the Department of Agriculture indicated that had this gadget not been provided wheat farmers would have increased the wheat acreage in the United State for the crop of 1950 more than 500,000 acres. So, really, gadget 272 curtailed wheat acreage. The reasonableness of it appealed to the farmers and they complied with the recommendations of the Department in a most commendable manner.

If the present wheat allotment is carried out as indicated by statements from the Agriculture Department, wheat growers in the West and in Colorado should be able to produce wheat in sufficient quantities to provide for our usual consumption, as well as a necessary reserve in time of crop shortage or worldwide general food supply.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in 8 minutes, including the remarks of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, may I remind the committee and Members of the House of the statements I made last year during the consideration of the acreage allotment measure.

Members of the committee have labored under the false premise that just because a farm was out of cotton production during the years 1946, 1947 and 1948 that it had gone out of cotton production. As a matter of fact, the base period should be lengthened. In western Oklahoma we are faced with a two-crop system, principally cotton and wheat, diversifying by raising additional crops such as oats, barley, alfalfa, grain sorghums, cattle, and some clover, millet, and so forth, depending on rainfall, hail, drought, windstorms, greenbugs, and so forth.

No law enacted from a national standpoint can work equitably without some exceptions. We need those exceptions in western Oklahoma. If the Department of Agriculture were permitted to express its opinion here today, we would find that it would oppose many of the provisions in this bill.

Our farmers are interested in the farm program and it is their desire to comply with any act which is fair and equitable. I hope the committee will adopt my recommendations in conference, because the future will be determined by our action today.

The crop year 1949 should not have been excluded. It is not fair to allow only those who raised cotton in 1950 to vote on next year's program.

There should be a small set-aside to constitute a national reserve, to be allocated by the Secretary of Agriculture to emergency areas.

There should be a special provision to allocate some acreage to the Secretary in order that he could allocate allotments to irrigation and reclamation areas to the extent that the acreage would not be taken from the acreage of the dry-land farmers.

The program should be so planned as to make the most advantageous use of the soil to which it is adapted.

By all means a provision should be included in this bill to provide exchanges of cotton and wheat allotments at the county level through the triple-A committees.

In the interest of our country we should take every precaution to protect the family size farms to the extent that the farmers and their families will have economic family-operating units.

We should encourage diversification, the use of soil conservation practices and soil conservation in this and every other farm measure.

Our State PMA committees and our county committees exercised full use of the provisions under the 1949 act, yet many hardships occurred. This was not the fault of the State or county committees.

Although this bill today is an improvement over the one passed last year it still has many provisions which should be corrected.

Before you vote on the measure I should like to read the following news article from Saturday's Washington News:

GOT TO GROW MORE COTTON

Cotton experts say Government must spur cotton planting next year if we're not to run into actual shortage by 1951. We've a short crop and stocks are going fast.

By August 1, 1951, carryover's likely to be 3,000,000 or 3,500,000 bales, and experts say 4,000,000 is danger point. That means 1951 cotton farmers must produce crop big enough to meet all 1952 needs plus at least 500,000 bales to carry over. It means planting 27,000,000 acres next year, compared with 19,000,000 this year, they say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARSALIS].

Mr. MARSALIS. Mr. Chairman, I shall support the committee amendment striking section 6, the so-called wheat amendment, from this bill. This amendment was originally put into the bill for the purpose of taking care of the situation that existed in Colorado and a few other Western States. At that time the national allotment as originally announced by the Secretary of Agriculture for the 1950 crop of wheat was 68,944,099 acres. In view of the Korean war situation, however, the Secretary of Agriculture increased this acreage for the 1951 crop to the sum of 72,784,810 acres.

The amendment provided that no county should be cut more than 5 percent of its last year's allotment. The Department of Agriculture, through a modified formula which it adopted, based on the previous law in effect prior to the special legislation adopted last year, states that such formula will protect against undue hardship cases in Colorado and other States and that it will be equally as effective as section 6 of the bill. The distinguished and able gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] gave an excellent explanation of how such areas as Colorado would be taken care of under this formula in answer to my question to him during the debate on this bill last Thursday.

As explained to me by the Department of Agriculture, the Colorado wheat acreage allotment for this year will be 2,856,653 as opposed to 2,971,769 which was allotted last year. In other words, this new figure represents 96.1 percent of the acreage planted to wheat last year. The Department also stated that the State committee would in turn compute each county's last 3-year average and scale it to the State allotment and that in no event should any one county receive less than 95 percent of its last year's acreage, nor more than 105 percent of such acreage.

In view of these representations by the Department of Agriculture, under which any county in the State would be as well off as it would be under the amendment, and in view of the further fact that the farmers otherwise would have to wait until legislation including this amendment is passed, which might take considerably longer since it has not as yet been scheduled in the Senate and farmers are ready to start planting their crop at this time. I feel it is for the best interests of wheat farmers in my district that the amendment be adopted and section 6 taken out of the bill thereby permitting much quicker action in determining the specific allotments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section 6?

Are there any amendments to section 7?

Are there any amendments to section 8?

Are there any amendments to section 9?

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BECKWORTH: On page 19, after line 18, insert the following:

"4. Add at the end of section 359 of such act the following new subsection: '(j) the penalty provided for in this section shall not apply with respect to peanuts produced by any person who is recognized by the county committee as being a peanut farmer if his total acreage planted to peanuts during the year in which such peanuts were produced did not exceed 2 acres.' "

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in 7 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, this is in line with the general principle I have advocated in regard to a minimum for cotton producers. A strange thing has happened in some of our counties. We find that a person who has been growing cotton cannot grow cotton, and in instances he has been growing peanuts, he cannot now grow any peanuts—certainly not enough to stay in the business.

I have here some letters from folks—some, incidentally, not from my district. This one says:

Number of producers who will cease to grow peanuts: 50.

That is from one Texas county.

Number of producers receiving less than 2 acres who will cease growing peanuts: 90 percent of those who receive less than 5 acres.

In another Texas county there are 53 old grower farms that receive less than 2 acres, and 69 new grower farms that receive less than 2 acres. It is estimated that 80 percent of the farms will cease to grow peanuts and 50 percent will cease to farm.

I submit to the Members of this House that by legislation, you are definitely putting people out of the business of growing a given crop which they have grown, and also putting them out of the farming business in some cases. It is my opinion that an amendment like this would have a salutary effect to prevent that being done, putting people off the farms or out of the business of growing certain crops.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 29, 1950.

DEAR FRIENDS: County by county in your State I'd like the following information:

I would like to know the number of peanut producers in each county. Generally in thinking of your average farmer and producer, what is the least number of acres he can afford to grow or economically grow? How many producers in your State received allotments less than the number of acres you mentioned in answer to the immediate previous question? How many of your peanut producers received allotments of less than 2 acres? Of the number of peanut farmers receiving allotments of less than 2 acres, how many will cease to grow peanuts? Approximately how many will cease to farm for themselves? How many new producers applied for peanut acreage in your State this year—1950? How many acres did you have to distribute to them? Approximately how much did each receive?

I repeat I'd like to obtain this information county by county.

Regards,

LINDLEY BECKWORTH.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: This will reply to your letter of May 29 in which you requested certain information regarding peanut acreage allotments and the acreage of peanuts that should be grown on the farm to sustain the farm family.

I am attaching a summary of the number of farms and total allotted peanut acreage for all Texas counties. The summary is prepared to show data separately for "old" farms and "new" farms.

We do not have information on the other questions raised in your letter and feel that we cannot afford to ask our county committees to make the statistical analyses and summaries required since each county has a very heavy work load for the next several months. I trust that the attached summary will answer most of the questions on peanut allotments.

Very truly yours,

B. F. VANCE,
Chairman, State Committee.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
Giddings, Tex., May 29, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Reference is made to your letter of May 15 and we herewith enclose the following information:

1. Number of peanut farms in Lee County: 1,054.

2. The least number a farmer can afford to grow: 10.

3. Number of producers receiving allotments less than the above: 661.

4. Number of producers receiving allotments less than 2 acres: 174.

5. Number of producers who will cease to grow peanuts (approximate): 50.

6. Number of producers who will cease to farm for themselves (approximate): 25.

7. Number of producers who applied for new grower allotment, 1950: 72.

8. Number of acres to distribute to them: 109.7.

9. Approximate acreage for each new grower: 1.5.

Very truly yours,

WARREN D. MOODY,
Secretary, Lee County PMA.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
Montague, Tex., June 7, 1950.

Re peanut questionnaire.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: In reply to your recent questionnaire, you will find listed below the information you requested concerning peanut growers in Montague County.

Number of peanut producers in county: 375.

Smallest acreage producer could afford to plant: 5.

Number of producers receiving less than 5 acres: 207.

Number of producers receiving less than 2 acres: 71.

Number of producers receiving less than 2 acres who will cease to grow peanuts: 90 percent or approximately 64.

Number of producers receiving less than 2 acres who will cease to farm for themselves: 50 percent or approximately 35.

Number of applicants for new grower allotments: 34.

Number of acres for distribution to new growers: 73.2.

Acreage (approximate) each new grower received: 1.5 to 3.

Yours truly,

BUEL E. WRIGHT,
Secretary, Montague County PMA.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
Bastrop, Tex., June 1, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: This will reply to your letter dated May 15, 1950, regarding peanut farms in Bastrop County.

Bastrop County has 346 old grower peanut farm allotments and 69 new grower peanut farm allotments. The committee believes that the average producer cannot afford to economically grow less than 3 acres of peanuts. In Bastrop County 96 old grower farms received an allotment of less than 3 acres, and 69 new grower farms received less than a 3-acre allotment.

There are 53 old grower farms that received less than 2 acres and 69 new grower farms that received less than 2 acres. It is estimated that 80 percent of the producers on the farms receiving less than 2 acres will cease to grow peanuts and 50 percent will cease to farm for themselves. There were 73 applications for new grower allotments and 69 received allotments. New grower farms received 51.5 acres from the State committee reserve. Allotments ranged from 0.1 to 1.5 acres.

Respectfully,

NORMAN U. NOVOSAD,
Administrative Officer, Bastrop County PMA.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION,
Allendale, S. C., June 1, 1950.

Mr. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: I am listing below the information requested in your letter dated May 18, 1950:

1. What is the least number of acres an average farmer can afford to grow or economically grow: 5.

2. How many producers received allotments less than the number of acres shown in 1: 135.

3. How many peanut producers received allotments less than 2 acres: 76.

4. Of the number of peanut farmers receiving allotments of less than 2 acres, how many will cease to grow peanuts: 50 percent.

5. Approximately how many will cease to farm for themselves: None.

6. How many new producers applied for peanut acreage this year (1950): 9.

7. How many acres were distributed to them: 18.6.

8. Approximately how much did each receive: 2.

Very truly yours,

HENRY B. BARKER,
County Administrative Officer, PMA.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
Thomasville, Ga., June 30, 1950.

Mr. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: This is in reply to your letter dated May 17, 1950.

Peanut producers in Thomas County	983
Peanut producers who received less than 5 acres	567
Peanut producers who received less than 2 acres	164
Peanut producers who ceased to grow peanuts in 1949	28
New producers who applied for peanut acreage in 1950	74

Generally, in thinking of the average farmer, 5 acres of peanuts is the least number of acres he can afford to grow economically.

One hundred seventy-four and one-tenth acres were distributed to the 74 new producers. This averaged approximately 3.2 acres per producer.

We cannot yet determine the number of producers who will cease to grow peanuts in 1950.

Very truly yours,

EDWIN Z. STERLING,
County Administrative Officer,
Thomas County PMA Committee.

DEAR SIR: In compliance to your letter dated May 12, 1950, we are furnishing you with the following information:

Number of peanut producers in county	78
Least number of acres producers can economically grow	5
Number of producers that received allotments less than the number of acres given in immediate previous question	40
Number of producers that received allotments less than 2 acres	16
Of the number of producers receiving allotments of less than 2 acres, how many will cease to grow peanuts	8
Approximately how many will cease to farm for themselves	5
How many new producers applied for peanut acreage in your county this year—1950	15
How many acres did you have to distribute to them	31.3
Approximately how much did each receive	2.9

Yours very truly,

KENNETH A. STRICKLAND,
Administrative Officer, Wakulla County, Fla.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: In reply to your letter of May 16, 1950, with reference to the peanut-acreage allotment for our county:

1. We have 109 farms with peanut allotments.

2. Producers in general should have at least 15 acres per farm in order to grow them economically.

3. There are 78 farms in the county that have an allotment of less than 15 acres.

4. We have 15 farms with less than 2-acre allotments.

5. All farms with less than 2-acre allotments will cease to grow peanuts.

6. Probably none of these producers will cease to farm for themselves, but will have to grow other crops for a livelihood.

7. We have 21 producers who applied for new-grower allotments.

8. A total of 27.3 acres were allotted to new growers of this county by the State committee.

9. On an average each new grower received 1.3 acres.

Trusting this supplies the information requested.

Yours truly,

MILLARD P. BROWN,
Secretary, Collingsworth County PMA.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
Quincy, Fla., May 26, 1950.

Mr. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: In reply to your letter of May 12, 1950, we have 175 peanut producers in Gadsden County. The least number of acres a farmer can grow economically is usually 5 acres; 89 of these allotments are under 5 acres; 39 received less than 2 acres. Nearly all of these will quit growing peanuts for harvest. We have no way of knowing how many farmers will cease to farm for themselves on this account. It will cause some to do so. Seventeen new growers applied for peanut acreage this year—1950. We had 17.4 acres to distribute to them. These range from 0.5 to 1.7 acres.

Trusting this is the information you desired, I am,

Yours truly,

BERNARD H. CLARK,
Administrative Officer, Gadsden County PMA.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
Inverness, Fla., May 22, 1950.

Mr. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have one farmer producing peanuts in Citrus County, Fla., on allotment. In growing these peanuts to be dug it is not economically profitable to grow less than about 30 acres, since no other growers in the county are growing peanuts for digging, and it is not possible to rent a picker, etc. This one producer has an allotment less than he can produce economically. No producer received an allotment of less than 2 acres. None will cease to grow peanuts or to farm for themselves because of allotments of less than 2 acres. No new producers applied for allotments for 1950 because no allotment was available for distribution to new growers in this county.

Yours very truly,

E. A. ZELLNER,
Chairman, PMA County Committee.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
Arapaho, Okla., May 31, 1950.

Congressman LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE BECKWORTH: In reply to your letter of May 18 we wish to advise that we are a very small peanut-producing county. In fact we have only two allotments, both of which are about 20 acres. They are both group I or old grower allotments.

We received approximately 30 applications for 1950 new grower peanut allotments. We were unable to give any of these new grower allotments because the county reserve for new grower allotments was zero. This was due to the fact that our county allotment was approximately 40 acres and 1 percent of our county allotment would be less than one-half acre for new grower farms.

Hoping this information will be helpful to you, we remain,

Yours very truly,

RUSSELL E. DILL,
County Administrative Officer.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: In reply to your letter dated May 17, 1950, we wish to advise that Greenville County is not a peanut county and has only 5 peanut-allotment farms with a total of 12.4 acres. The least number of acres the average farmer and producer can afford to grow is 10 acres. All allotments in the county are less than 10 acres, and three allotments are less than 2 acres, and none of these will cease to grow peanuts or farm for themselves. We did not have any applications for new-grower allotments.

We hope this information will be of help to you, and at any time we can furnish you any information we will be glad to do so.

Very truly yours,
T. LLOYD GARRETT,
County Administrative Officer.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: We have forwarded your letter of May 26 to the extension service for reply, as their farm management specialist says he has some information which may be useful to you. Several other persons were contacted, but did not know how large an acreage of peanuts is needed to support a family that depends on peanuts as their primary money crop.

Inasmuch as a question of this kind involves farm management and sociology, and also since I have not raised peanuts, it was believed best to refer the matter to the extension service.

Sincerely,
MILES MCPEEK,
Agricultural Statistician.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
New House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: This is in reference to your letter, dated May 13, 1950, to the Wood County PMA Committee.

We have approximately 400 peanut producers in the county. The least number of acres each producer can afford to grow is 2 acres. We have about 150 producers who received allotments of less than 2 acres. Of those growers having allotments of less than 2 acres, there will be about 25 or 50 who will cease to grow peanuts. I do not believe there will be any cease to farm for themselves. The number of new producers were 35 and the number of acres distributed was 21.4 acres and the average to each was 0.6 of an acre.

The excess acreage (for oil) up to the 1947 picked and threshed will help at least 150 or 200 producers in Wood County.

Hoping the above is the desired information, I am

Yours very truly,
ROY E. BARNETT,
Secretary, Wood County PMA Committee.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: This is in reference to your letter of April 5, 1950, to the county committee.

(1) The number of farmers receiving 5 acres of cotton or less was 1,248. (2) The number of new producers of that applied for allotments were 340. (3) The acreage that was available to distribute among the new producers was 300. (4) Each producer received from 1 to 1.1 acres. (5) The number of zero allotments were 10. (6) The percent of new producers regarded as genuine farmers was 88 percent (300) applications.

The number applications left from item 2 less item 5, less item 6, consisted of 30 applications that did not meet the necessary eligibility requirements.

If you desire further information, please advise.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BECKWORTH: Attached is a list, by counties, of the number of 1950 peanut acreage allotments in Oklahoma.

We do not know the exact number of peanut producers in each county; however, the attached list of allotments will represent approximately the number of producers in each county.

This information is being submitted in compliance with your communication of June 9, 1950.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
Richmond, Va., June 12, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: This will acknowledge receipt of the return of our letter of June 8 with attachment of summary of 1950 peanut acreage allotments for Virginia. We note that at the bottom of this letter you have requested that we give you county-by-county the number of producers in each county.

For your information, under the 1950 allotment regulations, all farms on which peanuts were produced in any year of the 3-year period 1947, 1948, and 1949, are eligible for allotments and should have been issued allotments. In addition, the instructions provided for issuing "new farm" allotments to certain farms on which peanuts will be produced in 1950 but on which peanuts were not produced in the past 3 years. Therefore, allotments have been issued to all farms producing peanuts in each county and the number of producers should be identical with the number of allotments shown in our tabulation. It is, of course, true that on many farms tenants are involved who might be considered peanut producers and the number of allotments as shown in our tabulation would include only one producer for each farm. However, all our contacts are with the farm operators and we have no record of the number of tenants involved on various farms on which peanut allotments have been issued.

As requested, we are returning herewith your letter and the attached tabulation of 1950 peanut allotments.

Yours very truly,
R. B. BRIDGFORTH,
Chairman, Virginia PMA State Committee.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
Richmond, Va., June 8, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: This will acknowledge your letter of May 29, 1950, requesting certain information on peanuts produced in Virginia. I regret the delay in replying to your letter, which was occasioned by my absence from the city.

For your information I am enclosing a tabulation showing by counties the number of peanut allotments established and the acreage allotted for 1950.

The remaining information requested by you would require a great amount of time and clerical help in making a compilation, and because of the pressure of other work in our office at this time, I do not believe we will be in a position to furnish the other information until a later date.

As soon as our work will permit us to gather this information, we will be glad to furnish it to you.

Very truly yours,

R. B. BRIDGFORTH,

Chairman, Virginia PMA State Committee.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
Stillwater, Okla., July 19, 1950.

HON. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BECKWORTH: Enclosed is a tabulation showing, by counties, the 1950 peanut acreage data which you have requested from each of the peanut counties in Oklahoma. This data is being submitted in compliance with your request in our recent telephone conversation.

The data in columns 2, 5, and 6 are necessarily based on estimates. Where dashes appear in these columns, we were unable to secure an estimate from the county committee.

We hope that the enclosed tabulation will serve your purpose and that you will call on us for any additional information which you think will be helpful.

Very truly yours,

CHARLES T. CAMERON, Chairman,
Oklahoma State PMA Committee.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BECKWORTH: In reply to your letter of May 29 requesting information in regard to peanut production in this State, we are enclosing a tabulation which will furnish you with most of the information you desire from the questions which you have asked in your letter.

In regard to your question as to what is the least number of acres a producer can afford to grow or economically grow, this is a question which is very difficult to answer in this State for there are so many variable factors involved, such as the size of the farm, other crops and livestock on the farms, and since peanut production in this State is a minor crop. We do not have very many farmers that depend solely upon peanuts for a living for himself and family.

The number of peanut allotments of less than 2 acres established in this State is 277. The number that will cease to grow less than 2 acres is estimated at 50. The number that will cease to farm for themselves is estimated at none. We have in this State a number of farms which produce less than 1 acre of peanuts and these farms do not have an allotment established for them, under the present regulations for peanuts.

Trusting this is the information you desire and assuring you that it has been a pleasure to have served you in this instance, I am

Very truly yours,

CARL FRY,
Chairman, State PMA Committee.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In complying with your letter of May 16, 1950, please find below the information you were seeking.

Number of peanut producers in Lamar County: 393.

What is the least number of acres he can afford to grow or economically grow: 1 acre.

Number of producers in county that received less allotment than mentioned in above question: None.

How many peanut producers received allotments of less than two acres: 80.

Of the number of peanut farmers receiving allotments of less than two acres, how many will cease to grow peanuts: None.

Approximately how many will cease to farm for themselves: None.

How many new producers applied for peanut acreage in your county this year, 1950: 24.

How many acres did you have to distribute to them: 78 acres.

Approximately how much did each receive: 1.5 acres.

Very truly yours,

ROY P. MASON,
Secretary, Lamar County PMA.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
Cross City, Fla., May 31, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
Congressman, Third Congressional District of Texas,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Reference is made to your letter of May 12 relative to peanut producers in Dixie County, Florida. Dixie County is primarily a livestock county and most of the farmers produce peanuts for hog feed. However, we do have some 20 farmers who grow peanuts for digging. Of these 18 have less than two acres allotment. It is the general thinking of the average farmer that they cannot economically dig and pick less than 5 acres. Of the number of farmers having less than two acres allotments none will cease growing peanuts but about 75 percent of them will not dig. We had no new producers applying for acreage this year but the reason for this was that when told the probable size of new grower allotments those that were interested decided that it would not be worth the trouble of filling out the forms.

Trusting that this is the information that you desire, I am,

Very truly yours,

CLARENCE L. DICKINSON,
County Agent.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BECKWORTH: Appreciate receiving your recent letter regarding peanut producers in our county; however, at the present time we are so busy with measuring peanut and cotton crops, that we do not have a clerk available to secure the necessary information you requested.

Mr. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,

DEAR SIR: Reference is made to your letter of May 26 relative to the number of acres of peanuts required to support a family.

It is my opinion that in the section of eastern New Mexico where peanuts are raised successfully that from 5 to 7 acres of peanuts in good irrigated land is sufficient to support a family nicely.

Yours very truly,

ELLIOTT S. BARKER,
State Game Warden.

Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BECKWORTH: In reply to your letter of May 26, 1950, this is to inform you that the number of acres that a family of a man, wife, and three or four children need for a primary money crop is from 8 to 10 acres of Virginia-type peanuts. I mention the Virginia-type peanuts as this is the only variety grown on a commercial scale in this State. The above estimate of acres is based on a yearly average of from 1,000 to 1,100 pounds per acre, and also on the basis of the present support price.

Mr. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
Congressman, Third District, Texas,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: In answer to your letter relative to peanut allotments in Jack County.

We believe the least acreage allotment to the farmer should be not less than 10 acres since special equipment is needed in harvesting the crop.

We have only six old growers who have an allotment of less than 2 acres which I believe was caused by not planting their allotment and maintaining their history.

Jack County had 15 applications for new-grower peanut allotments for 1950. I believe the law limits the State to 1 percent of the State allotment for new growers. Due to heavy work in the county this year the State office asked that we send the new-grower applications to them to figure. The 15 were allotted 14.3 acres but not many will plant their allotment of less than 1 acre.

We had so many in 1949 that didn't plant their allotment that we sent cards to all of our peanut growers asking that they return the card stating if they would or would not plant their 1950 peanut allotment. Then if they said they would not plant their allotment the county committee took all the allotment they were permitted to and distributed it to other growers.

We are more of a livestock county than farming but we do have 548 allotment farms: Wheat, cotton, and peanuts.

We do appreciate your interest in the small farmer who must be cared for in the marketing-quota program because there are children to be fed, clothed, and sent to school besides some soil- and water-conservation work to do.

Everyone should feel their responsibility on soil and water conservation since it affects everyone.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM E. YOWELL,
Administrative Officer, Jack County PMA.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BECKWORTH: Your letter of May 12, regarding peanut producers in this county, is hereby acknowledged.

Please be advised that we have only two peanut allotments in this county, with both receiving allotments in excess of 2 acres. These two allotments are 17.4 acres and 2.4 acres, respectively. They were not affected by the new regulations.

Very truly yours,

CARL P. DEAL,
Administrative Officer, Pasco County PMA Committee.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: With reference to your inquiry of peanut producers in Middlesex County, we wish to advise that there are only two peanut growers in our county. One of these farmers maintains an allotment of approximately 10 acres, which is the least acres that the producer can afford to grow economically. The other producer now has an allotment of 2.7 acres, which we do not believe justifies him to grow peanuts.

There were no producers applying for new peanut allotments this year.

These farmers farm for themselves and we believe they will continue to do so. This we hope will give you the desired information, since we are not a peanut-producing county.

Yours very truly,

FLORENCE G. WILLAFORD,
Secretary, Middlesex PMA.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: With reference to your letter of May 17, 1950, the following information from Horry County, S. C., is supplied herewith:

1. The average farmer in this county feels that the least number of acres of peanuts that he can afford to economically grow would be 2.5 acres.

2. There are 339 peanut producers with allotments in Horry County. Of this number 287 have allotments less than 2.5 acres.

3. 279 farmers in this county have received allotments of less than 2 acres.

4. It is not believed that any producer who is interested in peanut production would cease to grow peanuts this year because his allotment is less than 2 acres.

5. Since this is primarily a flue-cured tobacco county, no farmer will cease to farm for himself because of his small acreage of peanuts.

6. There were not applicants for new grower peanut allotments in this county for this year, the reason being that there is hardly any probability of a person receiving over a 1-acre allotment.

Yours very truly,

BUCK N. KING,
County Administrative Officer.

LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: There are 42 peanut producers in Clay County. About 3 acres is the least number of acres a farmer can afford to grow. There were 13 producers in this county that received allotments of less than the 3 acres mentioned above. There were 6 producers that received allotments of less than 2 acres. Peanut farmers receiving allotments of less than 2 acres, will cease to grow peanuts commercially but will grow some for home use. None will cease to farm for themselves. There were 13 new producers that applied for peanut acreage in Clay County in 1950. New grower reserves were retained in the State office. All new growers received a total of 13.4 acres.

DEAR HONORABLE BECKWORTH: This is in reply to your letter of May 18, 1950. The following is a list of the questions and answers requested in your letter:

1. The number of peanut producers in Pender County: 335.
2. Number of acres of peanuts a producer can grow economically: 5.
3. Number of allotments less than 5 acres in county: 185.
4. Number of allotments in county less than 2 acres: 56.
5. Number of allotments in county less than 2 acres which will not be planted: None.
6. Approximately how many will cease to farm for themselves: None.
7. Number of producers who applied for new allotments in Pender County in 1950: 11.
8. How many acres did we have to distribute to them? We did not have any acreage to distribute to them as the distribution of acreage is done in Raleigh for new growers.
9. How many acres did the new growers receive in Pender County: 3.

Very truly yours,

Mr. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: In answer to your letter of May 13, 1950, we give the following information.

There are 24 peanut producers in Lampasas County, and 20 acres is the least number of acres that he can afford to grow or economically grow. Twelve producers in our county received allotments less than the number of acres mentioned above. There were no producers who received less than 2 acres. One new producer applied for peanut acreage in our county this year, 1950. We had 4.5 acres to distribute to them. Each one received 4.5 acres since there was only one new producer.

Yours truly,

WILLIAM W. WILSON,
Secretary, Lampasas County PMA.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
Burnet, Tex., May 29, 1950.

To: Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

From: Raby A. Alford, secretary, Burnet County PMA.

Subject: Information requested in letter of May 13, 1950.

Information as requested is listed below:

What is the least number of acres average peanut producer can afford to grow: 5.

How many producers received allotments less than acreage mentioned above: 7.

How many of your peanut farmers received allotments of less than 2 acres: 2.

How many of this number (receiving allotments of less than 2 acres) will cease to grow peanuts: 2.

How many will cease to farm for themselves: None.

How many new producers applied for peanut acreage in 1950: 2.

How many acres did you distribute to them: 4.7.

Approximately how much did each receive: 1.5 and 3.2.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH] has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. I would like to observe that this amendment is objectionable just as the other amendments offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH] have been objectionable, and I urge defeat of the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to section 9?

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PACE: Page 20, after line 5, insert a new section 11 reading as follows:

"SEC. 11. The first sentence of section 363 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended to read as follows: 'Any farmer who is dissatisfied with his farm marketing quota may, within 15 days after mailing to him of notice as provided in section 362, have such quota reviewed by a local review committee composed of three farmers from the same or nearby counties appointed by the Secretary.'"

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment relates to the appointment of review committees. It is simply a clarifying amendment.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. What is the use of review if the bill has already limited him to the amount of increase to which he may be entitled? What is the purpose of this review?

Mr. PACE. In most every case, if a cotton grower is dissatisfied with his cotton allotment, he can file an application with a review committee. That is the general law. This amendment simply clarifies the appointment of those committees.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments, under the rule the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ROONEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9109) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended; the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act; Public Law 74, Seventy-seventh Congress; the Agricultural Act of 1949; and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 728, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. BRAMBLETT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BRAMBLETT. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BRAMBLETT moves to recommit the bill H. R. 9109 to the Committee on Agriculture, with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith, with the following amendment: On page 1, strike out line 3, and all that follows down through line 6 on page 2, and insert in lieu thereof: "That section 344 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act" and renumber the following sections accordingly.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. BRAMBLETT. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The question was taken; and on a division (demand by Mr. BRAMBLETT) there were—ayes 10, noes 70.

Mr. BRAMBLETT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 120, nays 179, not voting 131, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Chair just counted 297 Members. A quorum is present.

Mr. WERDEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 160, noes 85.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will be authorized to correct section numbers.

There was no objection.

WHERE ARE WE? WHY? WHERE DO WE GO FROM HERE?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, if Good Old Joe's purpose—President Truman's characterization—is a desire to establish communism throughout the world, we are now in world war III, a war declared by the United Nations, not by your Congress.

Assuming, as we may, that the North Korean Communists' attack on the Republic of South Korea was instigated, and is carried on, by order of Stalin, there is reason to believe that he will, when he deems it expedient, bring about similar attacks in Indochina, Greece, Turkey, Yugoslavia, and in Germany. It is more than probable that these attacks will be first made, not by Russian soldiers, but by the troops of Stalin's satellite governments.

In Germany, undoubtedly he will use the large, well-trained, well-equipped army which he has created under the guise of establishing a police force in Eastern Germany. That force will be strengthened by the Red armies of countries whose governments Stalin controls.

Where are we? Fighting the first battles of world war III.

Why are we in world war III?

Because, after our armed forces and those of our allies had beaten Hitler's armies and our fighting men, without Russia's help, had beaten Japan, those in authority, not desiring to offend Stalin, ordered our soldiers to stay out of Berlin and Eastern Germany; gave to Russia jurisdiction over a large part of China; authority over several hundred million people in Asia. Because of the fears of France and Britain, we adopted the Morgenthau plan, which prevented the German people from becoming self-sustaining, rebuilding their nation as a barrier against Russian aggression; gave Russia part of Berlin, control over eastern Germany and the opportunity to establish communism there and in the adjoining countries. We aided Russia in taking Manchuria, establishing there a Communist army of around a million men. It now threatens Korea.

Our contributions of dollars and material and our concessions to, and appeasement of, Joe Stalin made him so powerful that now he has brought on world war III and actually threatens our national security, either through direct armed force, or by entrapment into wars on so world-wide a front as to exhaust us.

The program of the internationalists may result in the end of our Republic, the enslavement of our pepole; the imposition upon us of the obligation to furnish the armies and the munitions necessary to carry on from generation to generation wars which they deem expedient, either for world peace or for the fulfillment of their own plans or ambitions.

Where do we go from here?

That question cannot be answered by anyone until we know what the administration, that is, Mr. Truman, intends to do.

Secretary of State Acheson, who has been so friendly to, so afraid of offending, Stalin, while stating that, for our own security, we must and would "maintain armed forces in Japan, Okinawa, and the Philippines," said on January 12, 1950, that it would be "a foolish adventure" to attempt to defend Formosa.

He made it absolutely clear to the Russions that, so far as he was concerned—and presumably he was outlining our foreign policy—we would defend neither Formosa nor Korea.

When, on May 5, 1950, Senator CONNALLY, chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, was asked whether we were seriously considering abandoning South Korea, he said, "I am afraid it is going to happen, whether we want it or not," and he added that Korea was not "greatly important."

Yet, when the Communists of North Korea, reinforced and directed by the Russian Communists who came to power in Manchuria under a policy established by Acheson and others, invaded South Korea, Mr. Truman, without consulting Congress, at the request of the Security Council of the United Nations, without authority declared war.

Mr. Truman had no such power. On October 29, 1945, Dean Acheson asked the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that the President be given a free hand in ordering the use of our troops whenever United Nations Security Council so voted. But the Senate rejected the proposal.

Public Law 264, which was approved December 20, 1945, expressly provided that, before placing any troops at the disposal of United Nations, the President must obtain the approval of Congress.

The only modification of that law was the amendment of October 10, 1949, which authorized the President to assign no more than 1,000 Americans to United Nations to serve strictly in a "non-combatant capacity."

Nor can Mr. Truman justify his actions under the North Atlantic Treaty. Article 5 reads:

> The parties agreed that an armed attack against one or more of them in Europe or North America shall be considered as an attack against them all.

Korea is in neither.

How can anyone stand behind a President, as we are being asked to do, when we do not know from day to day where he stands nor what he intends to do next?

As your Congressman here in Washington, the only things that I know the President is certain about is that he wants more money to carry on the war effort—and that he will get; he wants additional billions for his socialization program, more power to use arbitrarily for his own and his party's political advancement. Oh yes; one thing more he wants—a subservient "rubber stamp" Congress.

Mr. Truman is in clear over his head. The Congress, particularly the Senate, should take him in hand, outline a foreign and a domestic policy which has as its objective the welfare of this country; then, regardless of the advice of the Achesons, see that the administration adheres to that policy.

Where do we go from here? Like many others who will not admit it, I know little, if anything, about military science or world affairs. But is it permissible to inquire whether, instead of carrying on, for 5 or 10 or more years, a war all over the world and by so doing completely exhaust ourselves, destroying our ability to defend ourselves here at home, assuming that Joe Stalin and the Communists intend to destroy us and world civilization—if our air offensive is what we have been told it is; if the atomic bomb is as powerful as we have been led to believe, we should not, without delay, use both on Stalin, in Russia, where it will hurt the most, and bring peace?

Cruel and murderous, do I hear you say? Yes. But when was war anything but just that? How many times have we been told by those in authority that Stalin intends to bomb us when he has the ability? Why sit around, waiting for him to destroy us? Would you rather have our wounded, with their hands tied behind them, when captured, shot? Would you rather have your boys prisoners of war, made the slaves of barbarous Korean, Chinese, or Russian Communists in Siberia?

War is hell. I have done my best to keep our Nation out of it, but the more decisively and the sooner it is ended, the quicker will peace come to us and to the world.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all members may have five legislative days within which to extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A SYSTEM OF PRIORITIES, ALLOCATIONS, AND REQUISITION OF MATERIALS AND FACILITIES

Mr. LYLE, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 740, Rept. No. 2763), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 day, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the substitute committee amendment recommended by the Committee on Banking and Currency now in the bill, and such substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill. At the conclusion of such consideration the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any of the amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or committee substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL PROPERTY AND ADMINISTRATIVE SERVICES ACT OF 1949

Mr. MADDEN, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 741, Rept. No. 2764), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9129) to amend the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, and for other purposes. That after general debate which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS IN MAJOR DISASTERS

Mr. DELANEY, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 742, Rept. No. 2765), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8396) to authorize Federal assistance to States and local governments in major disasters, and for other purposes. That after general debate which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Public Works, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

KOREAN LEGISLATION

Mr. McGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our fighting forces in Korea I have introduced two bills which I hope will be acted upon without delay. Both bills extend the authority of the War Claims Commission to cover our current struggle to contain the totalitarian army of North Korea. One bill would authorize the War Claims Commission to award up to $10,000 to the widow, children or parents of a member of our Armed Forces who, as a prisoner of war, was illegally killed by the Government of North Korea. Newspaper reports attest daily to the cruel treatment handed out to our soldiers when they are captured by the North Koreans. While we hope and pray that our enemy will soon subscribe to the rules of warfare, we must, nevertheless, do something for our boys and their families under these ruthless practices. The second bill I have introduced will amend the War Claims Act of 1948 by authorizing the Commission to compensate prisoners of war held by the North Koreans and any of our soldiers hiding in Korea to avoid capture by the North Koreans.

SIGNING OF ENROLLED BILL

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the adjournment of the House until tomorrow noon the Speaker be authorized to sign the enrolled bill H. R. 7273, to provide a civil government for Guam, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING ON WEDNESDAY

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

MRS. EVELYN M. HRYNIAK

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 2655) for the relief of Mrs. Evelyn M. Hryniak, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 2749)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2655) for the relief of Mrs. Evelyn M. Hryniak, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum passed by the House insert $6,250; and the House agree to the same.

WILLIAM T. BYRNE,
WINFIELD K. DENTON,
Managers on the Part of the House.

HARLEY M. KILGORE,
ALEXANDER WILEY,
WARREN G. MAGNUSON,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2655) for the relief of Mrs. Evelyn M. Hryniak, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The bill as passed the Senate appropriated the sum of $7,500 to Mrs. Evelyn M. Hryniak for personal injuries, pain and suffering, permanent disability, and loss of earnings sustained by her and arising out of an accident which occurred at Gudensberg, Germany, on October 21, 1948. The bill was reduced by the House to $5,000 and at the conference the sum of $6,250 was agreed upon.

WILLIAM T. BYRNE,
WINFIELD K. DENTON,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. GLADYS J. SENYOHL McCARTHY

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2234) for the relief of Mrs. Gladys J. Senyohl McCarthy, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. BYRNE of New York, DENTON, and KEATING.

LOUIS J. MARX

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4528) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Louis J. Marx, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That, notwithstanding the provisions of title 28, United States Code, section 2680, jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Louis J. Marx, New York, N. Y., against the United States on account of personal injuries sustained allegedly as a result of an assault by a soldier in the United States Army.

"SEC. 2. Notwithstanding any statute of limitations or lapse of time, suit upon such claim may be instituted within any time of 1 year of the enactment of this act. In any such suit brought pursuant to this act proceedings shall be had and the liability, if any, of the United States shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of law applicable in the case of tort claims against the United States (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 1346 (b)): Provided, however, That nothing in this act does or shall constitute an admission of liability on the part of the United States."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act conferring jurisdiction on the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Louis J. Marx."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOHN G. ESSENBERG

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4628) for the relief of John G. Essenberg, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to John G. Essenberg, of 436 Sixty-eighth Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., in full settlement of all claims against the United States arising out of his personal injury in an accident, involving a United States Army truck, which occurred on the West Side Elevated Highway between Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Streets, New York, N. Y., on March 20, 1944: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PATUXENT DEVELOPMENT CO., INC.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 6363) conferring jurisdiction on the United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina, to hear, determine, and render judgment upon certain claims of the Patuxent Development Co., Inc., with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

"That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of the Patuxent Development Co., Inc., of Southern Pines, N. C., against the United States for damages, if any, sustained by reason of the allegedly tortious use and occupancy between August 17, 1943, and August 31, 1943, inclusive, of the Pine Needles Hotel property, at Southern Pines, N. C., by the Army Air Forces Technical Training Command under contract No. W202 eng-16862, dated March 3, 1942.

"SEC. 2. Notwithstanding any statute of limitations or lapse of time, suit upon such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the enactment of this act. In any such suit brought pursuant to this act proceedings shall be had and liability, if any, of the United States shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of law applicable in the case of tort claims against the United States (28 U. IN THE FISCAL YEAR WHICH ENDED LAST MONTH SECRETARY OF DEFENSE JOHNSON DID MANAGE TO MOVE $2,000,000,000 FROM THE REAR ECHELONS TO FRONT LINE SERVICE AND COMBAT—HE DID THIS BY SEEMINGLY TRIVIAL REFORM—HOLMES ALEXANDER

Mr. BOYKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include two statements.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOYKIN. Mr. Speaker, again I wish to tell of the innumerable calls, letters, and telegrams that I have received with respect to the statement in which I told of the magnificent job that Louis Johnson is doing and has done since the very day upon which he became the Secretary of Defense.

This morning's mail brought to me a copy of a special article written by one of America's most conservative, and certainly one of our best nationally known columnists, Mr. Holmes Alexander. This article, headed "The Washington Scene," clipped from the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram—makes it crystal clear that Mr. Alexander did not jump at any conclusions at which he arrived, but as he himself wrote:

He has spent some time and considerable shoe leather in digging up the facts.

As usual, Holmes Alexander is totally disinterested and unbiased, impartial, and so palpably fair in giving credit where credit is due that it is for me as great a pleasure as I deem it a privilege and duty to direct it to the attention of my colleagues in this House.

Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last our Secretary of Defense appeared before the Senate Appropriations Committee and there made a statement of tremendous current interest, not alone to the Members of both Houses of Congress, but to every citizen in these United States, and particularly to the men, the families, and the friends of those in the forces now fighting to their death in Korea.

Mr. Speaker, because of that interest and the further fact that this statement will not be printed in the hearings of the Senate Appropriations Committee and thus become available for distribution for some weeks to come, I ask unanimous consent to insert the same into the RECORD.

What follows, Mr. Speaker, is the column of July 26, the Washington Scene, as written by Holmes Alexander and clipped from the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram together with a statement made that same day by the Honorable Louis Johnson, Secretary of Defense, before the Senate Appropriations Committee:

THE WASHINGTON SCENE

(By Holmes Alexander)

THE MILITARY DOLLAR

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 26.—There are no neutrals in the war of Louis Johnson, now raging over the cocktails and inkpots of this stirred-up Capital.

Ranged against the Secretary of Defense are some who held great personal affection for the late James Forrestal, whom Johnson replaced; some who were disemployed or "discombobulated" by Johnson's economy wave which engulfed over 170,000 useless civilian workers, and some who believe the locker-room rumor that Johnson has beached the Navy, dissolved the Marine Corps, grounded the Air Force, and depopulated the Army.

On Johnson's side are his personal friends and a discouragingly small number of thoughtful persons who know what the Secretary is trying to do. Since I intend to support the Secretary in this column, I admit to liking him personally and to have spent some time and shoe leather in digging up facts. I frankly embrace the theory that Johnson, regardless of his ambitions and heavy-handed methods, has greatly improved the country's ability to fight world war III and to live under the long-term war economy which now seems to be our fate.

No amount of rhetoric, of course, will prove these points, but I shall soon give some case histories for that purpose. In broad terms, Johnson has created a climate of economy among the services, causing Federal dollars to go much further than in the past. This will not seem important to those who assume that Federal dollars are limitless or that desk-borne generals and admirals shouldn't be forced to pinch pennies. But in the fiscal year which ended last month Johnson did manage to move $2,000,000,000 from the rear echelons to front-line service and combat. He did this by seemingly trivial reforms, such as:

EVERY MAN HIS OWN SHIRT

In the Army and Air Force, the enlisted personnel used to turn in worn-out clothing and draw new garments. Now all three services are under the Navy system which gives cash allowance for clothing. The money incentive has made the men's clothes last a lot longer, and in 1951 the Army and Air Force will have a purse of $140,000,000 to spend on other items, presumably battlefield hardware.

BACK TO THE FLIGHT LINE

Until recently the Air Force assigned 150 men and 72 vehicles to the cops-and-robbers game of apprehending stragglers and deserters. At the suggestion of Johnson's office this job is now done by the FBI and local cops. The personnel (equivalent to more than a dozen heavy bomber crews) and the machines (enough to serve a wartime squadron) have been assigned to more essential duties.

LESS SHIPS, MORE MEN

For many years the Navy has conducted reservists sea training in a flotilla of small craft. By moving the trainees to fewer but larger vessels, as suggested by the Secretary's management committee, the Navy increased the training capacity from 36,000 to 46,000 reservists a year—and also saved $2,000,000 per annum to spend elsewhere. Navy aviation, by grounding some desk officers and cutting nonessential skylarking, got an additional 700,000 hours of combat-training time out of its planes.

GET IT FOR YOU WHOLESALE

All three armed services were separately converting their communications to ultra high frequency waves when Johnson's office brought everybody in for consultation. By revising the specifications and pooling the orders, each service purchased 2 years of radio supplies with a 1-year budget.

All such savings must become visible on paper before they become tangible in the battlefield. Contrary to much misinformation on the subject, none of the money saved goes back into the Treasury. All of it gets to the battle area.

In terms of the 1951 budget, still before Congress at this writing, the Navy traded its savings for three attack carriers, three carrier air groups, one cruiser, four marine fighter squadrons, and six marine battalions. The Army got an extra division and $51,000,000 worth of heavy material, largely artillery and engineering equipment, now very useful in Korea.

These are only a fistful of examples, but they show the pattern of what Johnson is trying to do. Largely because of his 16-month concern with pinch-penny details, the Federal dollar will buy us more front-line fighting than ever before. That's something to think about in a nation that may be under arms for a generation to come.

STATEMENT OF SECRETARY OF DEFENSE LOUIS JOHNSON BEFORE THE SENATE APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE, JULY 26, 1950

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, the last time I appeared before this committee was April 26, 2 months before the Republic of Korea was invaded. At that time I said:

"The Secretary of State and the Secretary of Defense, as a working committee of the National Security Council * * * have also appraised recent events which make it entirely possible that appropriations in excess of those which have been requested for the current year will be required in succeeding years, not only for our own military forces but also for the military aid program. Just as it is possible that in future years this Nation will have to devote an increased percentage of its total budget to these items, it is also possible that our partners in the North Atlantic Pact will be required by the force of events, and by the force of collective planning as well, to take similar action. The events to which I allude include the Soviet atomic explosion, the fall of China, the serious situations in southeast Asia, the break in diplomatic relations with Bulgaria, and deteriorating relations with other satellite countries, the Soviet assumption of control over the armed forces of Poland, Soviet naval expansion, the increased Soviet pressures in Germany, the recent attack on a naval aircraft in the Baltic, and the recent Soviet demands relative to Trieste.

"None of this presents a happy prospect; but the cold war is not a happy circumstance. The only satisfaction that I can personally derive from the situation lies in the fact that our own Military Establishment is well on the road to becoming a stronger and more powerful organization, and one which, as circumstances require, can utilize increased appropriations in a manner which will provide substantially increased combat effectiveness, whereas, even as recently as 1 year ago, large sums of money out of any increased appropriations would have been drained off in the form of unnecessary overhead. It is particularly important that the Armed Forces maintained by the United States shall at all times provide a sound base on which can be built a military establishment of increased size, should circumstances so require."

Gentlemen, circumstances do so require. That is my reason for being here today, in support of supplemental appropriations in the amount of $10,500,000,000.

I know that all of you are familiar with the contents of President Truman's message of last Wednesday. That document presents, better than anything I might say, the reasons for our request for this supplemental appropriation. The chairman of the Armed Services Committee of the House, the Honorable CARL VINSON, said of the President's message that it was a "firm message which will be heartening to all Americans." In making this statement, Chairman VINSON added:

"I want especially to say that I am delighted to know, from the President's message and from my own contacts with the Defense Department, that what has been recommended has the complete and unstinted support of all the civilian and military leaders of the Defense Department. This is a splendid example of teamwork and efficiency in the Defense Department."

I am extremely grateful to Chairman VINSON for his generous support. It is entirely accurate to state that this supplemental appropriation has the unanimous approval and support of the civilian and military leaders of the Department of Defense.

The appropriation problems with which this committee, the Congress, and the Department of Defense have had to deal in recent months have not been easy ones. I know of no better summation of these problems than the one which Chairman GEORGE MAHON of the Armed Services Subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee made on the floor of the House in support of that committee's recommended budget for 1950. You will recall that on that occasion, Chairman MAHON said: "If war comes soon, we are appropriating too little. If we have miscalculated the dangers, if the threat of war is just a deceptive mirage on the horizon, we are appropriating too much."

The dilemma described by Chairman MAHON was a dilemma which confronted not only this committee and the Department of Defense, but also the President and the people of the United States. It was not a new dilemma. My predecessor as Secretary of Defense, James Forrestal, outlined this dilemma very aptly in testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee on April 21, 1948, about a year prior to the time that I became Secretary of Defense on March 28, 1949. On that occasion, Secretary Forrestal quoted the following excerpt from a memorandum he had received from the Joint Chiefs of Staff:

"Based solely on military considerations, it is the opinion of the Joint Chiefs of Staff that the administration should advocate a balanced Military Establishment commensurate with the 70-air-group program for the Air Force. * * * The Joint Chiefs of Staff recognize, however, that the phasing (of this balanced Army, Navy, and Air Force program) must be made responsive to such other factors as the capability of the aircraft industry to expand, the impact of the cost of the program on the national economy, and the calculated risk which can be accepted in the light of changing world politico-military situations."

After quoting the foregoing memorandum from the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Secretary Forrestal then went on to make the following statement:

"I think that I can say to you, therefore, that the President, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Secretary of Defense, and the Secretaries of Army, Navy, and Air Force—as well as the Senate and House of Representatives, I feel sure—are all in agreement, as a military matter, on the desirability of what the Joint Chiefs have described as a balanced Military Establishment commensurate with the 70-air-group program.

"The Joint Chiefs * * * have also reported to me that a force of the recommended size would require, in fiscal 1949, additional appropriations in excess of $9,000,000,000. * * *

"In my opinion, the Joint Chiefs were entirely correct in addressing themselves exclusively to the military considerations. That is their job. But they were equally correct in pointing out that other considerations—the impact of the cost of the program on the national economy, for example—are factors which the Pesident and the Congress must consider.

"The impact on the economy of an additional $9,000,000,000 program is a matter that deserves—and will, I am sure, receive—the most careful attention by both the President and the Congress.

"My insistence, throughout the consideration of these matters, has been that they must be considered in a rational and organized manner—and not on a basis of emotional reaction. * * *

"If the Congress and the President should ultimately decide that the military considerations, at this juncture in world history, outweigh the fiscal considerations then we should, by all means, embark on the $9,000,000,000 additional program. But if the Congress and the President should ultimately decide that a program of somewhat lesser magnitude is required—in the interest of national solvency and in the interest of avoiding, so far as possible, allocations, rationing, price controls, and a host of other restrictions—then we should proceed in such a manner that we will get the most national security for each dollar we spend. * * *

"Bearing in mind over-all considerations such as those I have just been discussing, and after receiving the Joint Chiefs' $9,000,000,000 recommendation of April 14, 1948, I asked the Joint Chiefs this supplementary question: Granted the military desirability of the $9,000,000,000 program, what program would the Joint Chiefs recommend—in the general vicinity of $3,000,000,000—as the most effective military program within the limits of the funds that will probably be available to us?

"Yesterday, I received the unanimous reply of the Joint Chiefs—and I again emphasize the unanimity of the reply. Their specific recommendation—on the more limited basis envisioned by my more recent question—was that the $3,000,000,000 program should be increased by $481,000,000. * * *

"The program I am here discussing, therefore, is a program which would increase the original 1949 budget request by $3,481,000,000."

The $3,481,000,000 which Secretary Forrestal recommended, when added to the 1949 budget as originally submitted, gave a total recommended military budget of $13,507,000,000 for the fiscal year 1949. In other words, the dilemma presented by the competing military and economic considerations was resolved at the $13,500,000,000 level.

The President, his advisers in the executive branch of the Government, and the Congress solved the dilemma at that time by deciding that the fiscal considerations were equally as important as the military. The substance of that decision has been repeatedly ratified by the President, his advisers in the executive branch of the Government, and the Congress, all of whom reflected the will of the people of the United States.

At the outset of my remarks today, I quoted from my testimony of April 26. You will recall that my concluding remarks on April 26 dealt with the same dilemma I have just been discussing. On that occasion, I said:

"This year's budget for the Military Establishment, with very little variation, has received the approval of the Executive Office of the President, the Secretary of Defense, the Appropriations Committees of the Congress, and other responsible persons such as General Eisenhower. In other words, there has been substantial unanimity of opinion on a vital point—namely, the fact that the world in which we live requires military expenditures of approximately the amount which the President submitted to the Congress last January. Consider for a moment how unusual it is to find that all of the responsible authorities who have spoken to this subject have been in complete agreement on more than 95 percent of the military budget. The House Appropriations Committee has suggested some reductions; General Eisenhower has suggested the possibility of some increases. But even taking the maximum of these suggestions—both on the minus and on the plus side—there has been no suggested variation which would affect the military budget in an amount greater than 4 percent. I call this fact to your attention * * * because I think that it constitutes the best argument that I could possibly present as to the fundamental soundness of the budget."

One month ago the Republic of Korea was invaded. The action of the United Nations, supported by the United States, called for the use of troops, ships, and aircraft to repel this criminal aggression which threatened the peace of the world and the security of our own country. In the light of the actual fighting that is now in progress, we have reached the point where the military considerations clearly outweigh the fiscal considerations.

However, in our efforts to get the most efficient use of our military appropriations we have not had to deal with the same sort of competing considerations as those I have just been discussing. For all of us were equally determined to get maximum preparedness out of every dollar appropriated—and this determination to get the maximum return on the defense dollar will continue to govern our actions.

In enacting the National Security Act amendments of 1949, the Congress added language specifically addressed to this point, and required the Secretary of Defense to submit to the Congress, twice each year, "itemized statements showing the savings of public funds and the eliminations of unnecessary duplications and overlappings that have been accomplished pursuant to the provisions of this act."

Carrying out this congressional mandate has been the steadfast policy of the Department of Defense, and a prime condition of our efforts in this regard has been the elimination of unnecessary overhead, with a simultaneous improvement in the combat potential of the Armed Forces. Indeed, the over-all combat potential of our Armed Forces was at a higher level on June 25—the day the Republic of Korea was invaded—than had been the case at any time since postwar demobilization was completed.

I realize that the foregoing sentence could be regarded as a fine, glittering generality, so I would like to make it concrete. For that purpose, I will use specific illustrations.

In the case of the Navy, what the fleet is doing today would not have been possible 2 years ago. In March of 1948, just after the Communists staged a coup in Czechoslovakia, Secretary of Defense Forrestal was gravely concerned about the readiness of the active fleet. In a memorandum which he received on March 23, 1948, the following significant statement appears: "As of 22 March, there are 111 vessels of the active fleet immobilized and 66 reduced to limited operations (or a total of 177) by insufficient personnel. * * * In addition, most of the operating active fleet vessels are under peacetime allowance."

The situation was one of the factors which led Secretary Forrestal to request the supplemental appropriation of $3,481,000,000, which I have already discussed above. This situation was also one of the factors which has led the Department of Defense to advocate a greater fighting strength for each ship, even at the expense of reducing the total number of ships in the active fleet. The ships we need are ships that can float and fight. A ship that only floats is a liability instead of an asset. On June 25, when the Republic of Korea was invaded, every ship in the active fleet was capable of getting underway and moving into action. Off the shores of Korea, we are being provided with daily illustrations of the readiness of the ships in our active fleet.

In the semi-annual report which I recently submitted to the Congress, I discussed the general situation I have been describing above in these words:

"Over-all, the readiness of the Navy has been improved and the active fleet is 'ready to go'. It is manned at 67 percent of wartime strength with trained personnel who seek to make a career of the Navy. This represents a substantial improvement over the situation 18 months ago when a larger active fleet in number of men and ships was manned at only 61 percent of wartime strength with many of the ships either immobilized or in a reduced operational status because of heavy turnover of personnel and a serious imbalance in the skills and occupations represented."

In the case of the Air Force, there has been a substantial increase in our actual combat potential. In chapter IV of the semi-annual report which I submitted to Congress last February, I discussed this point in the following words:

"It is worth noting that on January 1, 1948, the Finletter Commission recommended 70 groups manned by 401,000 men. On that date the report also noted that the Air Force stood at 337,000 men for 55 programed groups. * * *

"The size of a 'group' is subject to change. As President Truman has pointed out, 'The number of groups is a somewhat misleading measure of airpower since the character, size, number of aircraft, and other elements of the group are not fixed but constantly change as conditions require'. An example of the type of change to which the President referred is the programed size of each B–36 heavy bombardment group—which stood at 18 planes per group less than a year ago, and which stands at 30 planes per group today. In this connection it should also be noted that the programed size of nine groups which stood at 30 B–29's or B–50's per group 2 years ago, stand at 45 today. In addition, these groups include 20 B–29 type tankers which increase the effective range of each individual bomber.

"In our Air Force of today and as planned for 1951, we have 416,000 men manning 48 groups, but due to the organizational changes noted above, these 48 groups according to Air Force estimates, are equivalent to 52½ groups of the size envisaged in the previous concept of the 70 group program."

I should also like to comment briefly on the situation with respect to the Army. In March of 1948, the Army's strength was 542,000. The Army's budgeted strength for the current fiscal year was 630,000, prior to the supplemental request which the President submitted to Congress yesterday. In addition to this increase in numbers, there has been a further increase arising out of the fact that proportionately more men are now in combat units, and proportionately less men are in noncombat categories. In my seminannual report, I pointed out that "this increase in combat effectiveness was made possible by savings in the use of undue numbers of personnel for administrative and overhead purposes". Between March 1948 and June 1950 the actual manpower strength of the Army's mobile striking force in the continental United States—the general Reserve—has increased by 165 percent.

As this committee knows, all of the top officials of the Department of Defense—both civilian and military—have been seriously concerned lest even the increased strengths I have been describing should be inadequate to meet the needs of world conditions. In order to do everything possible to meet this situation, we set up a Defense Department Management Committee, immediately after the enactment of the National Security Act amendments of 1949. To assist this committee in carrying out the recommendations of the Hoover Commission with respect to the Department of Defense, we employed the management engineering firm of Robert Heller and Associates. The first paragraph of the directive of the management committee reads as follows: "Pursuant to the authority vested in me by the National Security Act of 1947 as amended, I have established a Defense Management Committee. The mission of the committee is to bring about progressively better use of defense dollars through elimination of nonessential expenditures, and through improved management, in order to release funds for increasing combat effectiveness, and to provide opportunities to curtail over-all costs."

The expanded program which the President submitted to Congress Monday makes it all the more necessary that we obtain the maximum return for every dollar that we are investing in our national defense. This gives added point to a matter I mentioned here on April 26, when I said: "Our mobilization in time of emergency depends for its success upon the soundness of the forces in being which constitute our mobilization base".

The forces in being which make up our Army, Navy, and Air Force constitute a sound base. To that base, we recommend that you now add a total active duty strength in the neighborhood of 600,000 men—making a total of some 2,100,000 men.

Earlier this year this committee considered requests for a program covering all activities of the Department of Defense, approximating $13,300,000,000. Monday the President submitted a supplemental estimate in the amount of $10,500,000,000. The recommended revised budget, in the aggregate amount of $23,800,000,000, would accomplish the purpose of financing the costs of the Korean campaign, as well as providing for the earlier expansion of the military forces to cope with the present international situation.

The supplemental estimate includes $3,063,000,000 for the Army, $2,649,000,000 for the Navy, $4,535,000,000 for the Air Force, and $240,000,000 for establishment-wide activities of the Defense Department.

About 59 percent of the supplemental request, or $6,200,000,000, has been included for guns, tanks, ships, aircraft, ammunition, and other major procurement items. (Of this total about $3,344,000,000 is for aircraft—$40,000,000 for the Army, $620,000,000 for the Navy, $2,684,000,000 for the Air Force—and $185,000,000 is for shipbuilding.)

About 24 percent, or $2,500,000,000, would go for the operaiton and maintenance of the facilities and equipment for the regular operations of the Armed Forces, including the sharply increased demands for consumption-type matériel in the Korean campaign. (About one-half of the $2,500,000,000 would go for consumption-type matériel.)

About 13 percent, or $1,350,000,000 would go for the pay and allowances of military personnel, including their food, subsistence, and travel.

Of the balance, $174,000,000 is for military construction—$4,000,000 for the Army and $170,000,000 for the Air Force.

Exclusive of costs for Guardsmen and Reserves on active duty, $33,000,000 has been provided for the National Guard, Officers Reserve Corps, and the ROTC program of the Army.

One hundred and twenty million dollars has been included for research and development, $70,000,000 for industrial mobilization, and $50,000,000 has been allocated for contingencies.

As the President stated in his message transmitting the supplemental request, certain program changes will undoubtedly be necessary in order properly to prosecute the campaign in Korea. For this reason authority is being requested to adjust by 10 percent any single appropriation by transfer from other appropriations. This would permit the necessary adjustments either in the Korean support or in the build-up phase contemplated by these estimates. I have instructed Assistant Secretary McNeil to keep this committee currently informed of all such actions which we find necessary.

I want to emphasize that this is not a call for full mobilization. It is a call to increase our strength in being, in order to enable us to support the United Nations action in Korea and to build up our strength elsewhere to meet the threat to world peace.

The supplemental request before you rests on two principal factors: First, the requirements for land, naval, and air forces needed by General MacArthur successfully to prosecute the campaign in Korea; and second, the need to build up the strength of our forces over and above those committed to the Korean campaign.

The plans covering the build-up of our forces are based upon studies which began immediately after the President's announcement of the Soviet atomic explosion last September. You will recall that I discussed these studies when I testified here on April 26.

Because of the events in Korea the minimum desired forces which these studies showed to be required—normally a matter that would have been provided for in next year's budget—are being requested at this time.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff are in complete agreement and fully support the forces planned for the build-up in our strength, and are also in complete agreement as to the forces to be provided in support of the Korean campaign.

The action in Korea is a battle of supply and the distances involved are great. As a result, we must expect difficult problems and slow progress. The Military Establishment which we are asking you to expand, however, is a sounder mobilization base than the United States has ever had before. By reason of the groundwork laid by my predecessor and the efforts of officers and civilians in all the agencies of the Department of Defense—the spirit of teamwork within the Department has grown tremendously. We have today a closely-knit team of land, naval, and air forces. The swift decisions during the past 4 weeks to coordinate the combat efforts of the Army, Navy, and Air Force in the Far East are striking examples of the benefits of unification in an emergency.

Our military establishment has been geared to provide a sound mobilization base and a swift striking force in case of a third world war. In addition, we have had to be prepared to meet, to the extent that we could, the first shock of an act of calculated, local aggression. The latter test has been met with unprecedented speed in Korea. We are now in the process of backing our shock troops with the necessary reinforcements. We are asking you to supply the men and equipment to replace those being used in the Far East, and additional strengths to prepare for the possibility of future emergencies. I am sure that all of us will meet the challenge of the aggressor with the same undaunted spirit as that shown by our fighting men in Korea.

The witnesses who follow me will give the details of the program we recommend. It is a program designed to bring the action in Korea to a successful conclusion; it is also a program designed to promote world peace by deterring further aggression. It is the sort of program to which I referred on April 12 this year when I gave the founder's day speech at my alma mater, the University of Virginia.

Speaking in Charlottesville that day, I said:

"I have every confidence in our ultimate success. We shall face facts as they are and shall fit our defense plans and our manpower and munitions requirements to meet them. Our defense plans, however, are not rigid. They are not the laws of Medes and Persians. They are flexible and adaptable to changing conditions. They are under constant study and review. If we become convinced that our present means are insufficient to meet the exigencies of the day and the probable threats of tomorrow, we shall not be too humble to ask for more; and if we find them more than adequate, we shall not be too proud to ask for less. We shall always seek the truth and we shall take fitting means to meet the truth."

Gentlemen, I shall be glad to attempt to answer any questions you may have.

THE PHILIP SPORN PLANT

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago there was dedicated in my section of the country one of the largest steam-electric power plants in the world. I refer to the Philip Sporn plant directly across the river from Racine, Meigs County, Ohio. This plant has been constructed by the Ohio Power Co., one of the subsidiaries of the American Gas & Electric Co. It has been constructed without one single dollar of Federal or public funds of any kind.

We hear so much these days about the production of power by public owned and operated power plants. This Philip Sporn plant will produce more power than that produced by the great Hoover Dam. It will produce more than 6,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours a year, which is about a billion more than the annual generation at Hoover Dam.

We hear so much from some sources about the wonderful production by the 36 plants that constitute the Tennessee Valley Authority. The Philip Sporn plant will produce 40 percent of that furnished by the whole 36 plants of the TVA.

Mr. Speaker, this plant will be expanded so as to almost double its present capacity. This plant will guarantee a continuation of the progress that has been made in the Ohio Valley in the past few years. With plenty of water and plenty of power, the Ohio Valley will be one of the great manufacturing sections of the country.

URGENT AND IMPORTANT—POLITICS, THAT IS

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that while American boys are fighting and dying on Korea, the Truman administration has delayed an all-important meeting to stimulate a much needed minerals and metals production program so that a high Government official can travel around the country making political speeches.

The Associated Press reports that Interior Secretary Chapman has delayed from August 1 to August 3 a meeting of the Department's National Minerals Advisory Council because Crow Girard Davidson, the Department's Assistant Secretary for Mineral Resources, is off on a political junket and will not be in Washington on August 1.

Mr. Chapman notified the 44 members of the Advisory Council that the meeting is urgent and important. I agree that such a conference is urgent and important. But despite the urgency of the situation and the need for wartime speed up in the development of vital minerals and metals now needed on the Korean front, Chapman delays the meeting in the interest of politics, as usual.

I believe that the Members of this House and the people of the Nation want Government officials, particularly those concerned with the war effort, to remain on the job in Washington in these serious days. I believe the people of the country are getting sick and tired of the double shuffling of the Truman Deal, fighting a war with one hand and playing politics with the other.

A delay of 2 days in a program for the development of critical materials is not only shocking, it is criminal.

The boys in Korea cannot take 2 days off from the bombs and the fire of the blazing Red tanks. They must stay on the job every second, fighting for the principles of freedom and liberty while the Washington bureaucrats delay the war effort with a political junket on the taxpayers' time and money, speaking at Democratic rallies in Montana, Idaho, and other points.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MAHON). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] is recognized for 25 minutes.

(Mr. PHILLIPS of California asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include two letters from the State Department.)

THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE CONTINUES TO IGNORE ITS PLEDGE

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, it was just about a year ago now, August 8, 1949, to be exact, that I called the attention of the Congress to the unjustified treatment accorded the farmers of the Imperial Valley, Calif., by our Department of State. Today I rise again to say that another year has passed and the situation remains unchanged—the rights of these farmers are still being denied to them.

For another year, the Department of State has failed to keep its word whereby Imperial irrigation district—the organization of the farmers of the valley—may proceed to construct the Pilot Knob hydroelectric power plant and operate the All-American Canal, the right to do which was granted by the Congress in the Boulder Canyon Project Act of December 1928 and confirmed by the Federal Government in its contract of December 1, 1932, with the district. Since 1944, the district has been trying to carry out this contract but has been prevented from doing so by the combined refusal of both the Secretary of State and Secretary of Interior to honor the contract.

In my statement of a year ago I gave a brief description of the background of this matter which I will not repeat at this time. In November 1947 the district submitted a proposal to the State Department dealing with the operation of the All-American Canal, development of the Pilot Knob power site, by and at the expense of the district, and several alternatives as to properties of the district located at Andrade, Calif., to be used in connection with the carrying out of the water treaty with Mexico which became effective in November 1945.

In August 1948 the State Department notified the district by letter that, as to its proposal dealing with the All-American Canal and Pilot Knob power development, this was accepted in principle, subject to clarifying amendments, and that a draft of a proposed agreement would be submitted to the district at a reasonably early date. The record will show that this acceptance was made after the State Department had consulted with the Department of Justice and the Department of the Interior. No such draft of a proposed agreement has as yet been submitted to the district. Two years have gone by.

As to the district's Andrade properties, the letter of August 1948 stated that the Department of State had selected from the alternatives proposed, that of acquiring and operating them directly by the Federal Government since it was believed that such was required by the treaty. It is interesting to note that, in this connection, a bill is now before the Congress giving the authority for such acquisition. The record will show that Imperial irrigation district has not only endorsed this bill but will cooperate in carrying out its provisions; Imperial will stand by its proposal despite the fact the State Department has failed, so far, at least, to make good on its acceptance of the district's proposal.

Mr. Speaker, the record will show that a draft of contract was prepared by the State Department and submitted for comment to the Secretary of the Interior in November 1948, and that, despite the fact he had previously endorsed the district's proposal, he reversed his position, due no doubt to the strong political pressure adverse to the district's interests brought to bear on him and refused, or at least failed to submit, comments on the draft. This same source of political pressure started to work on the then new Secretary of State and as a result the matter was taken up for review by the latter. That is where the matter rests today.

At this point let me say, Mr. Speaker, that the outstanding feature of the opposition from this source of political pressure is that no one knows or can determine any logical reason for such opposition or what interest such opposition has in the manner one way or another.

Not only had this continued refusal on the part of our Government to honor its word to its people been grossly unfair and caused damages amounting to many hundreds of thousands of dollars to my people in the Imperial Valley, but now our country is at war again. Mr Speaker, we need to conserve our petroleum supply for war needs. This Pilot Knob power development, which the district is anxious to construct at its own expense, and which was endorsed and urged by the War Production Board in 1944 because of its minimum requirements of strategic materials, should be in operation now. It is not in operation, and, as a result, over 250,000 barrels of fuel oil a year are being consumed to produce the electric power which the Pilot Knob plant should be producing.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to remark that this is not a good example of conduct by our Government nor is it in the best interests of efforts to do all we can to win the war.

As a matter of record, I wish, Mr. Speaker, to place in the RECORD at this point the letters from the Department of State. The first is the simple acknowledgment of the receipt of a tear sheet from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 8, a year ago, which I sent the Secretary of State, after making my report to the Congress on the delay in carrying out the Department's promise to the farmers of the Imperial Valley. I shall, of course, send the Secretary of State a copy of the RECORD of today, calling his attention to the report I am now making to the Congress; that another year has passed without this promise being kept. I hope, Mr. Speaker, this is not to become an annual event.

AUGUST 15, 1949.

Hon. JOHN PHILLIPS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. PHILLIPS: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter dated August 10, 1949, relating to the operation of the All-American Canal facilities by the Imperial irrigation district.

This matter will receive prompt consideration and a further reply to your letter under acknowledgment will be made in the near future.

Sincerely yours,

ERNEST A. GROSS,
Assistant Secretary
(For the Secretary of State).

The second letter, dated October 5, 1949, goes into the matter more fully. I call attention to several sentences. Although the Imperial district's proposals were submitted to the Department of the Interior, by the Department of State, on November 10, 1948, the Secretary of State says on October 5, 1949, that—

No definitive reply has been received from the Department of the Interior.

I also call attention to the fact that the Secretary of State discussed this matter, which is entirely a California matter, with the Senators from our neighboring State, Arizona, and agreed to discuss it with the Senators from my own State, California; but that to this date the California Senators and the Representative from the Twenty-second District are still waiting for the suggested conference.

OCTOBER 5, 1949.

The Honorable JOHN PHILLIPS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. PHILLIPS: Further reference is made to your letter of August 10, 1949, relating to the operation by the Imperial irrigation district of the All-American Canal facilities.

The views which you expressed and the summary of the situation which you gave before the House of Representatives on August 8, 1949, have been carefully studied. The summary of this matter which you gave is substantially correct. However, in respect to your statement that the Imperial irrigation district submitted its proposals pursuant to the request of the Department at the Los Angeles conference in September 1947, the record shows that it was as a result of a suggestion made by a representative of the Department of Justice that the district submitted proposals for the operation by it of the All-American Canal facilities in conformity with provisions of the water treaty of February 3, 1944. The representative of the Department of State agreed that it would give consideration to whatever proposals the district might submit. The proposals were, of course, submitted in December 1947 and supplemented in January 1948.

The Department, after consultation with the Department of Justice, the Department of the Interior, and the United States section, International Boundary and Water Commission, United States and Mexico, reached the view that under the provisions of the treaty of 1944 a Federal or a State or a local agency might perform the actual operation and maintenance of the All-American Canal facilities. In accordance with this view the Department replied to the district on August 4, 1948, to the effect that the proposals were acceptable in principle provided that certain clarifying amendments were made.

Thereafter, following consultation with the United States Section of the Commission, the Department prepared a draft of contract amending, in keeping with the proposals of the district, the All-American Canal contract of December 1, 1932, to bring it in conformity with the provisions of the Water Treaty of 1944. This draft of contract, as you noted in your speech on August 8, was submitted on November 10, 1948, to the Secretary of the Interior for comment. Under the same date this draft was also submitted to the Attorney General for his views.

Since November 10, 1948, the Attorney General has replied briefly, but no definitive reply has been received from the Department of the Interior.

However, during the early part of this year it was urged upon the Department that the testimony of its representatives before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations when the Water Treaty of 1944 was before the Senate for advice and consent to ratification, supported the views that the facilities in reference were to be operated solely by the Bureau of Reclamation of the Department of the Interior and that the Senate, in voting on the treaty, relied upon this interpretation by the Department of State.

Subsequently, Secretary Krug also indicated his view that the statements of witnesses during the Senate hearings on the Treaty amounted to assurances to the Senate that the Bureau of Reclamation would operate and maintain the facilities in reference and, further, that as a practical matter it was not feasible for the United States to permit any agency except a Federal agency to operate and maintain the All-American Canal works.

Pursuant to these representations, the Secretary personally reviewed the testimony and subsequent developments and as a result he was impressed by several points. He agreed to discuss with Senators HAYDEN and MCFARLAND the procedure which should be followed by the executive branch before reaching a final decision in the matter. He has also agreed, at the request of Senator KNOWLAND, to confer with the Senators from California. The Secretary would, I am sure, welcome you to a meeting with the California Senators. No date has been set for such conferences and in the meantime action has been suspended.

Because of his interest in the matter, we are transmitting a copy of this letter to Senator KNOWLAND for his information.

We shall be glad to keep you advised of further developments.

Sincerely yours,

ERNEST A. GROSS,
Assistant Secretary
(For the Secretary of State).

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MAHON). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is recognized for 30 minutes.

TAX THE UNTAXED BEFORE HEAPING ADDITIONAL TAXES UPON THE OVERTAXED

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, President Truman has asked for an additional $10,500,000,000 to spend in tooling up for the war in Korea and to prepare for any other wars that soon may be in the cards for us—and this request will be granted. Senator TAFT has said that we should place the war in Korea on a pay-as-you-go basis, that we should raise whatever money we may need for war purposes by tax increases now. President Truman recommends a $5,000,000,000 tax increase in a "quickie" or emergency tax increase bill, the balance needed, to be provided by passing a regular tax increase bill after January 1, 1951. Whether to raise the additional billions needed for war now, as Senator TAFT recommends, or part of it now and part of it later, as the President suggests, should be an easy question to settle. We know additional billions are needed; we know addition billions will be spent; and we know the additional billions must be raised in taxes sometime. I say we should do the job now, and adopt a pay-as-you-go war program.

Mr. Speaker, in facing emergency war needs it is the duty of Congress today to see to it that every individual and every business is taxed at full rates and upon all earnings. There should be no exceptions. The war tax load should rest upon all alike and should be equitably spread. We failed to see that this was done in World War I, and also in World War II. So far as taxation was concerned, we played favorites in both those wars. Are we going to do the same again?

When the emergency war tax bill is written, the American people expect—and they will demand—that the Congress write a tax bill that will require everybody and every organization to pay their just share of the tax load, including the present tax-exempts. This we should do. Neither political fears nor political threats must keep us from doing our duty in this respect. No one should be allowed to make a tax-free profit out of the war needs and the war emergency. It is our job to increase the tax burden to take care of the increased needs, and also to make sure that the increased tax burden is properly and equitably spread. This can be done by closing all present tax loopholes, whether legal or illegal loopholes. By closing all tax loopholes we can raise an extra billion dollars a year to help pay the war costs.

Mr. Speaker, in 1916, just before World War I, co-ops were given their first legal tax exemption. The tax rate at that time upon business organizations was only 1 percent of their business profits. However, that 1 percent tax upon business profits was raised during and after the war until it was 12 percent by the end of the 1920's, becoming a real tax advantage for the co-ops and a serious threat to taxpaying businesses.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what about World War II?

Careful research by Mr. Homer E. Marsh of the National Associated Businessmen of Washington, D. C., and by Mr. Lovell Parker, former Chief of Staff for the Joint Committee on Taxation, reveals that during the four war years, 1942 through 1945, co-ops did a total volume of business amounting to $33,000,000,000, the profits of which, at wartime rates, would have paid into the Treasury—had they been taxed—$855,200,000. Their taxpaying business competitors had to pay taxes. The untaxed paid nothing and thereby profited enormously.

The following table shows these figures broken down by years:

Total business volume of co-ops:
1942	$5,484,000,000
1943	7,175,000,000
1944	9,615,000,000
1945	10,818,000,000
Total during World War II	32,818,000,000

The amount of income tax that was not paid on earnings by co-ops during those war years was as follows:

1942	$135,100,000
1943	197,200,000
1944	259,800,000
1945	263,100,000
Total	855,200,000

This total of unpaid taxes would have bought a lot of guns and tanks and planes at a time when our armies were fighting for their very lives.

Mr. Speaker, since the war, tax-exempts have sprung up like mushrooms all over the country. Before World War II, no colleges were operating macaroni factories, pottery factories, or luggage factories. The sale and lease back of stores, wheat farms, cotton plantations, and other commercial properties to tax-exempt organizations as a scheme for avoiding the payment of taxes is a recent concoction. And the present giant co-ops, co-ops organized like great holding companies controlling and monopolizing whole industries, have just begun to be organized and to get established financially.

It was the untaxed earnings of these co-ops during World War II, while other businesses were paying taxes up to 90 percent of their profits, that provided the funds for expansion and started their tremendous growth. Had they been required to pay taxes like their business competitors, they would have had to turn over to Uncle Sam during the war years almost $1,000,000,000 in taxes. Instead, they were permitted to retain that amount to plow back into business expansion or to buy out their taxpaying competitors. No wonder co-ops mushroomed so rapidly during and since World War II.

By 1948 the total volume of business done by co-ops had risen to $17,000,000,000 per year—and it is still growing rapidly. The Nation needs the money that can be raised by taxing these organizations; and, if the proposed 45 percent corporation tax rate is levied upon regular corporation profits, there is no good reason why it should not be levied upon corporations organized as co-ops.

Mr. Speaker, the following table indicates the handicap that corporations and taxable commercial enterprises have been laboring under because of the tax-free status of co-ops and the tax-free status of the unrelated activities of educational institutions, religious institutions, charitable trusts, labor organizations, and various other tax-free enterprises, all competing with taxpaying ones:

TAX RATES APPLICABLE TO CORPORATIONS AND TAX PAYING BUSINESS ENTERPRISES FROM 1916 TO THE PRESENT TIME—NOT APPLICABLE TO CO-OPS

Nineteen hundred sixteen, 1 percent (year co-ops were exempted); 1918, 12 percent, normal tax rate upon profits; 1935, 12½ to 15 percent, normal tax rate upon profits; 1941, 40 percent, normal tax, plus 90 percent excess-profits tax; 1945, 80 percent overall rate (normal tax plus excess-profits tax); 1946, 38 percent, normal tax rate upon profits; 1950, 38 percent, normal tax rate upon profits.

Is it any wonder that taxpaying enterprises—with a peak war tax load of 40 percent normal tax plus a 90 percent excess profits tax—have been losing ground, while their tax-free cooperative competitors have been expanding by leaps and bounds?

Mr. Speaker, the question often arises concerning the extent that our economy has shifted to nonprofit ownership and to a tax-exempt or semi-tax-exempt status during recent years. Some idea can be ascertained by a comparison of the total wealth of the United States with the resources of mutuals, cooperatives, and other nonprofit organizations, including Government corporations and trust funds earmarked for special groups.

A study made by the National Industrial Conference Board, New York City, placed the total wealth of the Nation in 1938 at $309,000,000,000. The value of the dollar has declined approximately 43 cents since that date. If we assume that the national wealth has increased proportionately, it would be approximately $542,000,000,000 today. Of this total, $157,500,000,000 is held by the various tax-exempt and semi-tax-exempt organizations. This is 29 percent of our total national wealth. Their total resources are as follows:

Life insurance companies (Most all are mutuals and pay some income tax)	$50,000,000,000
Foundations	2,500,000,000
Mutual savings banks	20,000,000,000
Building, savings, and loan associations	12,000,000,000
Government pension trust funds	35,000,000,000
Educational institutions	2,500,000,000
Federal Government Corporations	23,000,000,000
Cooperatives	2,500,000,000
Mutual fire and casualty insurance	2,000,000,000
State and local retirement funds	2,500,000,000
Municipal and REA utilities	2,000,000,000
Postal savings	3,500,000,000
Total	157,500,000,000

Such a large part of the Nation's wealth should not go untaxed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what about world war III? How long will it last? When will the conflagration break out in other places besides Korea, Indochina, and Formosa? How much will it cost in money? In "blood, sweat, and tears"?

Congressman VINSON says:

> All the world is a tinderbox. Global war can begin at any time. * * * In the international arena there is dynamite everywhere. We can have a world explosion at any time. No one knows what may happen tomorrow. * * * It is a situation that demands the utmost concentration of effort, the greatest forbearance, the greatest willingness to sacrifice we have ever had.

Mr. VINSON's words present a grim picture. The picture is not overdrawn. We must prepare thoroughly for whatever is before us. As a part of that preparation we must—whether we like it or not—increase the tax load upon our people. In so doing Congress should see that the total tax load is spread equitably; that every individual and every business organization is required to carry their fair share of the tax load; that no group and no organization is allowed to go tax free, thereby piling up war profits to plough back into business expansion at the expense of taxpaying competitors. We must, Mr. Speaker, tax the untaxed before heaping additional taxes upon the overtaxed.

CIVILIAN DEFENSE

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the spokesman for the Civil Defense Director, Mr. Paul J. Larsen, yesterday made a statement which is reminiscent of the statement made several months ago by the Secretary of Defense, Mr. Louis Johnson, that if the enemy strikes at 4 o'clock in the morning we will be ready at 5 o'clock. The statement of this spokesman, speaking for Mr. Larsen is—

If an atomic bomb attack comes tomorrow we could give the cities pretty good guidance on what to do to protect themselves.

According to this spokesman, and I am reading from today's report of his statement in the New York Times, current plans call for a rounding out of the defense set-up, Federal, State, and local, in 18 months to 2 years. This, however, he goes on to say, could be reduced to 6 months if necessary. It is planned within a few months to get out a handbook for the guidance of our people in target areas.

Last Thursday Collier's magazine printed a feature article by its writer John Lear, blasting the neglect of United States civilian defenses. I quote a paragraph from the Washington Post of last Thursday summarizing that article:

"Washington bureaucrats are saying there will be a lot of double talk about fear of a garrison state instead of organizing the Nation's civil defense," a Collier's magazine article charges in its current issue entitled "Hiroshima, U. S. A." The article by John Lear paints a dramatic picture in both words and color drawings of the dropping of an atomic bomb on Manhattan with a resultant death toll of at least 180,000 persons.

In this article Mr. Lear emphasizes after a study of home defense in England that only the British are prepared in the ways of civilian defense.

Going back now to our reports of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy we find that this is not true; the Soviet Union of Russia is prepared perhaps more than the British in the art of civilian defense, having trained thousands of squads in protection against possible atomic bomb attack.

I have been hammering away at this problem for almost a year, back in those months when the National Security Resources Board charged with jurisdiction over civilian defense had no permanent Chairman, only an Acting Chairman, Dr. John R. Steelman, the President's alter ego, who, as everyone knows, was too busy with other matters on the home front to do a real job for civilian defense. Now after many months we have the able W. Stuart Symington as the head of that agency, and things are being done, but belatedly.

Speed is of the essence. Mr. John Q. Public is beginning to ask questions. He wants to know the ABC's, he is anxious to know where he fits in the picture. He does not go for the idea that he will be informed in detail after a bomb hit and he is among the surviving. He wants to know the score now and he will do his stuff when his Government lets him in on the know. Mr. Spokesman, tell Mr. Larsen to rush the handbook.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan (at the request of Mr. BYRNE of New York) indefinitely on account of illness in family.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia and Mr. O'SULLIVAN asked and were given permission to extend their remarks and include extraneous matter.

Mr. MANSFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an article appearing in the Vindicator, and also to revise and extend the remarks he made in committee and include various letters and telegrams as well as a communication previously inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. HAVENNER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. KING (at the request of Mr. WHITE of California) was given permission to extend his remarks and include a newspaper item.

Mr. MAHON asked and was given permission to revise and extend the remarks he made in Committee and include extraneous matter.

Mr. DOYLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. FARRINGTON (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. VELDE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a speech he made recently.

Mr. HOEVEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a resolution.

Mr. FULTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include two excerpts from speeches of the Minister of External Affairs of Australia as to relations with the United States of America; and in another instance to insert in the RECORD a letter of J. J. Singh, president of the India League of America, which appeared in the New York Times.
